The Serpents of Java.

A correspondent of the Illustrated Family Newspaper relates the following regarding the venomous snakes in Java; The Imho sugar estate in Java comprises over 12,000 acres, about one third of which is in cane. This is one of the most densely wooded parts of Java, and the bush is like a wall, impervious even to many wild animals, but snakes flourish, and there are no less than ten varieties that are deadly poisonous. Eight of of the coolies employed on this estate have died inside of four months from snake bites. The chain viper is most dreaded, as it will not get out of one's way, and when trodden on by the barefooted natives strikes fatally. Twelve mi es away is the ruined city of Choru, a wilderness of temples built of stone, cut in designs as fine as lacework. On the north side of these buildings are long arched passages, and here wild animals resort to get out of the heat. Leading from these avenues are hundreds of small chambers having no windows. In these lurk more snakes than can be found any where else in the island.

It is not surprising that the eastern nations look upon Englishmen as lunatics, they do so many foolish things from no The Serpents of Java. Humphreys' Med. Co., 111 William St., N. Y. It is not surprising that the eastern na-tions look upon Englishmen as lunatics they do so many foolish things from no apparent motives save to risk their lives Two years ago an English naval lieuten-ant was here visiting a neighboring plan-ter, and his peculiar craze was making a collection of Javan reptiles. His on y attendant was an English sailor lad about circton and those top grainst all warn collection of javan reportes. The only attendant was an English sailor lad about sixteen, and these two, against all warning, went roaming around the forests without a guide. In Choru, the ruined city, the lieutenant found a rich harvest, and killed a magnificent black Jaguar, but an adventure with a snake ended his sport. One day he and the boy were under one of the long archways of the big temple, and, looking through the doorway of one of the dark chambers, saw something yellow in the far corner. Without a moments thought he entered and gave the mass a punch with his cane. A tremendious hiss that fairly shook the walls was followed by an assault swift as the leap of a tiger, and the man found himself seized by a huge Dari snake, the most aggressive and dangerous of our constrictors. His left shoulder was crushed in the brute's teeth, and quick as a flash a coil was around his body, and he felt the steel-like compression.

and the brute's teeth, and quick as a hash a coil was around his body, and he felt the steel-like compression.

But the grit of the boy saved his master's life. He had a heavy, sharp knife, and he struck the reptile two heavy blows just back of the head, the most vulnerable part of the body, because the thinnest. Its backbone was divided. The coil relaxed, but the powerful tail lashed out, breaking the boy's leg. It was two hours before they were found and brought up in a cart. The lieutenants shoulder was crushed beyond surgery, and the arm was useless. Both master and boy recovered after a spell of fever. I saw the snake, a hidious object, black and yellow, and fifteen feet long. Such a brute would crush a horse.

Gunning one day near the Wasii River in the interior of the island, I watched a number of wild hogs coming to the water.

The bets a man wins are pretty good. in the interior of the island, I watched a number of wild hogs coming to the water to drink. Suddenly the head of a snake rose above the grass and a hog squealed. A python had siezed a full grown one, easily three feet high at the shoulder, and was throwing two coils around the body. Under the tremendous pressure the hog seemed to lengthen, and when the snake uncoiled I saw only a strip of meat, nothing distinguishable but the head. I shot the snake. It was over 12 feet long and 7 inches through, and yet its coils had crushed the bones of its prey like chips. There is no doubt that hidden away in vast swamps of the interior are many anaendas of enormous size. Parties have been made up to hunt them, but the malarious climate drives them back. In the museum at Batavia is the skin of a serpent that must have been fifty feet long when living. Such a brute would kill a u an as easily as it would a rabbit.
