It has been suggested quite frequently of late that the Supreme Court take up the batch of Acts of Assembly of 1897 and pass upon the constitutionality of each one. This, it seems, would be a good pian, for there is not a week passes that one or more recently enacted laws are declared by the lower courts to be unconstitutional. Last week Judge Wilson. of Philadelphia. quashed indictments against several employing bakers who were charged

Under the law those who refuse to Onder the law mose who retuse to pay the taxes assessed to them may be imprisoned. The law is clear enough on this point. But a very interesting question was raised in Bradford county question was raised in Bradford county the other day, says the Canton Sentinel, when application was made to court for the release of some men committed to jail from Canton for nonpayment of taxes, their friends having raised a purse to pay the assessment. Collector Riggs had balanced his accounts and refused to accept the money; the County commissioners were in a quandary and referred the matter to the District Attorney, who said it was an unusual case, and would not advise until he had time to give the matter consideration. The Sheriff was anxious to get rid of the boarders, but did not know get rid of the boarders, but did not know what to do, and the County Treasurer was also unwilling to accept the mon-ey, because of the lack of specific instructions in regard to the case.

Finally Judge Peck was appealed to and decided that the parties must remain in jail for three points, when they could be legally discharged under the Insolvent Debtor's act.

Speaking of freak wells, an oil man said recently to the Bradford Era that he was reminded of the old "midnight mystery" of Butler county. That well mystery of Butter County. That wen was drilled 22 years ago and started flowing light-colored oil at the rate of 400 barrels a day. Everybody thought the well had opened a new pool, and in a few days the drill was industriously bobbing on all sides of the new find. Over fitty wells were drilled, forming a complete chain around the 'nidnight mplete chain around the 'nidnigh ystery." but not one of them found e lead. The old well is still produc g about one barrel per day. The oi ing about one barrel per day. The oi is almost equal to the refined produc and readily burns in a lamp.

ed dramatic ability has made its sentation possible. The story is o plicated, yet so charmingly told, as plicated, yet so charmingly told, as to be exceedingly simple. An old inventor, after years of herculean effort and countless privations, and after passing through alternate periods of despair and hope, finally makes the dream of his life an accomplished fact—he completes and applies for letters patent for a Horseless Carriage, an invention destined to revolutionize modern methods of travel. A meeting is held to demonstrate the successfully workings of his invention, and at its close, the old man overpowered by joy at the successful conclusion of his life's work, falls dead. The patent papers are stolen by conclusion of his life's work, falls dead. The patent papers are stolen by the owner of the works in which the old man toiled, and who endeavors to fasten the crime of the foreman, who is the lover of the inventor's daughter The scenic and mechanical effects are entirely new and are unequalled by any in thrilling situations, most ingeniously connected and calculated to command the eager attention of an audience from start to finish. Undoubtedly the greatest scene in the play takes place in the third act, when a handsome stream is seen in the throes of an awful storm. James Nelson of North Dakota, came here to attend the funeral father will soon return home.

Nelson has the contract of supply the Government with horses in part of the country. While here he contracted to ship a fancy matched team of roadsters to Dr. F. Hamilton Crawford of Cooperstown.

Mr. Allison who runs the hack and carries the mail between Valencia and Glade Mills is thinking of having a boat built. He says navigation is good on that road.

Prof. John Myers, the violinist, and "Shamus O'Brien" of McFann paid Butler a visit on Monday.
