THEY THAT SIT IN DARKNESS

A STORY OF THE AUSTRALIAN NEVER-NEVER

BY JOHN MACKIE

AUTHOR OF "THE DEVIL'S PLAYGROUND" AND "SINNERS TWAIN."

CHAPTER IX.

When the sergeant of police arrested Jack, we were all so taken by surprise that it was a minute or two before we could realize the gravity of the situation.

Just then, glancing around the little crowd, I caught sight of Daly's face. It might only have been fancy, but it seemed to me as if there was an uneasy grin there.

"Are you sure you haven't made a mistake, sergeant?" he asked. "The sergeant, I thought, looked at him rather contemptuously, but made no reply."

"For mercy's sake, take me out of this, sergeant!" He had seen the figures of two men approaching the group. The sergeant made no demer when I spoke to the prisoner out of hearing of the others.

"Perhaps," said the sergeant, "if any of you think you can assist me in any way, you can come into the MacArthur tomorrow at 10 o'clock. He'll be brought up there before he gets to the bottom of it."

"I dare say," said the sergeant, "if you're a frivolis, sir"—this with an assumption of severity. "Remember an innocent man's life depends upon it."

"Goodby just now, Mr. Tyndall. We'll ride into the MacArthur tomorrow morning. Perhaps you could accompany Mr. Parker, and tell him he'd like to go some little way with his friend."

"But Jack would not have this. 'Oh, no, you are too good, Mr. Mackenzie,' he said. 'That would be too much. But perhaps, Dick, you could come in tonight after you have finished talking. I'll be all right then—not a convicted felon yet, you know.'"

"I'm not, only the devil may—tomorrow." "You're frivolis, sir"—this with an assumption of severity. "Remember an innocent man's life depends upon it."

nized by certain parties who have given the information and who are now in the MacArthur, as Farquharson, Mr. Rinsell here, a brother J. B. Insell, the sergeant, I've done my duty by having him arrested, and unless it can be proved that he's not our man I must commit him for trial. I suppose you'll be satisfied with that."

"Yes, for some considerable time," I replied, with difficulty keeping cool. "But I wasn't trouble you by explaining the nature of the mission you've been made, until you've had an opportunity of justifying your action. Is it a fair question to ask if the character of your information is above suspicion?"

"The police magistrate's face flushed slightly, and he appeared not a little annoyed. I wonder now why he did not kick me out."

"I was taken round to the police barracks, some 60 yards distant, and had a long conference with the magistrate, which was unnecessary to relate. Strangely enough one point never touched upon by us was his real identity. He seemed to have no recollection of seeing me at all."

"I don't see why you should put yourselves to all this trouble about me," he said. "My indifference only made me the more determined and occasioned me to speak my mind to him somewhat plainly."

"I can see you think I know nothing," "If it's a fair question, I what do you know?" I ventured. There was in my belief, I told him, what I liked better over. I'll tell you nothing that might interfere with your evidence—

"You think I don't know that it was Daly who rode into the township last night and told the police," she answered after a pause. "And you think I don't know that your friend's name is Mr. Tyndall. But all this is no account. You think I don't know what you came to ask."

"The hint struck home, and I remembered what had brought me here. It occurred to me that something might come of it one-sided bargain I was trying to drive. As I hesitated she anticipated me."

"Yes, you can tell Mr. Tyndall I'll come to the examination tomorrow and prove that my father recognized the man who was killed by the blacks on Scrambley creek as John Farquharson."

THE HESSIAN FLY.

What May Be Done After What Has-Been-Said About It.

The Hessian fly is giving trouble in various sections of the country. In a bulletin of the department of agriculture on this fly the remedies discussed at length are: burning the stubble, plowing under the stubble, selection of volunteer wheat, planting decay strips, rolling late sowing of fall wheat, intermittent wheat culture, sowing with sleep, mowing and selection of resistant varieties.

With the harvesting of grain there is open the policy of burning the stubble or the loss of the grain, the weather is so bad for the exclusion of beneficial parasites. If the weather is very dull, it will be best to defer burning, to allow the loss of the grain, the weather is so bad for the exclusion of beneficial parasites.

It will be observed that the modifications are not only in the weather, but in the condition of the soil, and that the suggestion amounts to postponement of burning until the weather is such a condition as to be safe to burn.

The proper time for sowing seeds will vary with the latitude. According to Webster, the best time for sowing seeds will vary with the latitude. According to Webster, the best time for sowing seeds will vary with the latitude.

Where a process of the fertilizer is not desired, rye is a good cover crop. It is also useful on very light, sandy soils, and on very hard, lumpy soils, where other crops grow with difficulty.

In commenting upon the complaints of consumers that sweet corn on the ear as found in city markets is entirely devoid of sweetness, and that it is not so sweet as the sweet corn raised in the rural New York says that no other farm product loses flavor more rapidly after gathering than sweet corn, and if it could be sold more promptly to the consumer he should hear no more complaints of its deteriorated quality.

In a Canadian experiment burning the stubble and plowing under the stubble and drilling in the seed gave a better result than drilling the seed on burned or unburned stubble.

In answer to the question whether manure, where sawdust has been used for bedding, is injurious to soil, American Gardening has obtained the opinion of one of our best authorities, that although manure is fresh and juicy, the Rural New Yorker says that no other farm product loses flavor more rapidly after gathering than sweet corn, and if it could be sold more promptly to the consumer he should hear no more complaints of its deteriorated quality.
