THE USE OF NITROGEN.

Intelligent Adjustment of the Fertilizer to the Kind of Crop. sey, who has made a study of the nitro-gen question. Professor Voorhees reminds the farmer that the best use of nitrogen is attained when it is applied to soils in good condition rather than o poor or worn out soils. Also the influence of kind of crop, in nore particularly the constituent ni-rogen. For example, the liberal appliduction-that is as large an increase use the nitrogen is so expensive

On the other hand, its applivalue, though not causing so large a proportionate gain in crop, may result in a larger profit, because the cost of the nitrogen, though considerable, is relatively a small item when compared with the increased value of the crop en used is very important, particular en crops. Market garden crops, as turwith the active forms of nitrogen if a rapid and continuous growth is to be naintained. Their edible quality is deply of plant food in reasonable excess of ordinary demands is essential in or-Nitrogen exists in commercial prod-ucts in a form that is immediately available—namely, nitrates; yet the fact that a nitrate is extremely liable to loss makes it desirable to determine first whether this most available form is in actual practice of greater or less ervice than those other forms which are rapidly changed into this active form, but which before their change are not liable to be lost from the soil. For example, the nitrogen in nitrate of oda is immediately available to the plant. If it is applied before or at the time of seeding, in such quantity as to meet the entire demands of the crop, an opportunity is afforded for loss previous to the time that the plant has thrown out its roots and is able to gather It from the soil, and also during its early growth, when it is unable to gather it rapidly. Sulphate of ammonia and dried blood are forms which change very rapidly into the nitrate form, but which previous to that change are readily held by the soil. In the use of any of these forms therefore, the conditions which prevai between the time they are applied and the time that they can be used by the plants would determine their relative usefulness, and it is, therefore, quite possible that under the same method: of application the one on the average might be as useful as the other, yet the oretically the active form would be the

A great many men never carry a pocketbook. One reason for this is that a well worn purse more easily slips from the pocket than a roll of bills. Then, again, the bulk of a pock-etbook is annoying. It takes up too much room, especially where the pan-taloons are made snug. When pocketbooks are not carried, a favorite re-ceptacle is the watch pocket. When his is used, the bills are made up into a little, hard bunch. Their presence is always felt against the body. In a crowd there is no danger of losing them, and when traveling with any considerable sum this is a safe de

Some men have a fad of carrying lot of new bills in an envelope that is kept in one of the inside pockets. Now and then a man is found who keeps : few bills in every pocket. He goes of the theory that if he is robbed of one lot a sufficient amount will remain to last him until he reaches home. He starts out feeling that he is going to be robbed and makes provision to mee every possible emergency. He usually makes three folds of his bills and tucks them away in the corners of h pockets with extreme care. He doe not feel surprised if he finds upon making an inventory after arrivin

If we take care of the small things are in effect taking care of the large things which the small things which the small things combine to make. That is the philosophy of the old financial proverb, and its application is as broad as human life. A great many men have cranky ideas about preparing their bills for ready handling. One plan is to fold each bill separately, keeping the denominations apart in the various divisions of their pocketbooks. This method facilitates the search for the desired sum when making a purchase. This is almost a sure guard against passing out a bill of the wrong denomination. Spring Opening Millinery. Large things are but an aggregation of small things.
