Everett Lawrence, formerly of Butler, and who learned the printing trade in the CITIZEN office is meeting with great success in the practice of medicine at Ottawa, Kansas. The Republican of that town lately contained the following:

"The Alkaloidal Clinic, of Chicago, one of the most prominent medical publications of the day, in its September issue contains an exhaustive treatis on membranous croup from the pen of Dr. V. E. Lawrence of this city. Dr. Lawrence, as is well known, has taken advanced ground in the treatment of this disease, usually so greatly dreaded and heretofore considered of so fatal character, and has made far more than local fame in the great success which has attended his efforts. The present article is largely descriptive of his progress, step by step in the study of the disease and the remedy for it; he also devotes a considerable space to establish the fact that membranous croup and diphtheria are widely different diseases. The article is sepecially interesting to students of therapeutics."
