CHAPTER VIII. You know that my word is worth, and I swear to you that while Alexander Ireland, master, has dropped down the channel in three weeks, the last we shall see of him is in the water.

"Good!" said Alec. "You think better of it. But I am going to make an example of the bolshyrot. Send that man aft."

"I'm no scholar," I answered angrily, for his taunt annoyed me. "Alec Ireland was the goody boy that did his lessons."

"The Roman admiral threw his men giving children overboard," said I gloomily, "and two-thirds of his fleet was destroyed."

PEACH CULTURE. Notes From One of New Jersey's Most Successful Growers.

In a very practical paper read before the New Jersey Horticultural Society, Mr. S. S. Voorhees advised concerning peach orchards:

At the time of setting trim off all the branches and cut back the main stem to about two feet. During the summer rub off the buds, allowing but one shoot to grow.

The following spring leave five buds as near together as possible around this stem about 3 1/2 feet from the ground.

For a day and a half we tramped up this story desert and then came to a wall of rock at the head, so steep that the stream which leaped over it was torn by the air feds into fragments in its fall and dropped into the pool at the bottom.

Next morning I was up as above. We looked nothing with but our arms and accoutrements, trusting to the wealth of the forest to provide us with all necessary provender by the way.

The 101 men who had sailed out of the Bristol Merchant had been reduced to 21, who were all weak from various ills, were left behind to guard the Bristol Merchant till her return.

"You will favor us with an account of the circumstances. The foolish birds refused their corn, if I remember rightly. 'I'm no scholar,' I answered angrily, for his taunt annoyed me.
