POULTRY GROWING.

For the General Farmer-Incubator and Hen Hatched Chick.

The position of the farmer with regard to poultry is entirely different from that of the specialist with a large plant.

To the farmer such information as the following from a late report of A. G. Gilbert, manager of the Canadian experimental farms, is especially directed.

Farmers have given increased attention during the past few years to the artificial hatching and rearing of chickens, which have been pursued by two methods:

By utilizing the incubator and beginning operations in late February or early March.

By deferring hatching operations until the hens have had a run outside, and as a result their eggs will hatch better.

In connection with the second method, unless the farmer has a brood hen and chickens in coops or grass.

It is a house which permits of his being independent of outside temperature, he will have to content himself with incubator and outside brooder.

His outside brooder is placed on the rapidly growing grass, and with proper care the young chicks will be found to make famous progress.

At the experimental farms when the hens became broody they were set in wooden boxes placed in vacant pens in a house.

The wooden nest boxes contained no litter and the hens were shown in the cut—those in front of the plant, as the bedder is working, to the left, those behind the plant to the right.

This method prevents the plants from growing together and allows the extra plants to run out between the rows, where they can be easily destroyed.

Bedding is done by people on the floor outside of the rows and the extra plants are pulled out with a hand tool very like a wide putty knife.

This bedding is, we think, the most important though costly part of the system.

During the latter part of the season we use boxes like the one shown, which is 12 inches wide and 2 inches broad.

This box can be worked under the leaves and runners, giving better and quicker work than any tool we have.

Calling the Cow. Professor George Hempt of Ann Arbor, Mich., has been investigating the manner in which we call the cow and otherwise talk to her in this country.

He has found that the normal call in the north and "oo mully" frequent in the middle and south the most common call is "sook cow," and in the largest portion of our continent "sook" is the normal call to cows, while some distinctive like "sook" is used in places.

In New Jersey and southeastern New York we still find "cush." This has been its way into literature in Jean Ingelow's "High Tide."

Cats, cats, cats, calling. The early days were falling.

Various interesting words are used at milking time. The commonest word employed to quiet a cow is "soo," "sook cow," "soo wench," "soo," etc. The pronunciation "soo" is peculiarly southwestern.

The Work Horses. After the day's work every night the shoulders of the horse should be thoroughly washed and dried, it may be that you are tired and that the chores will keep you busy until late, but it will pay you to spend an hour or two and groom your team.

You will have better and truer horses and better and more work out of them. Wash the neck, head and withers and pound the padding into shape. You don't want any sore shouldered horses, remarks The Farm Journal.

His Good Letter "V." When the late Horace Maynard, LL. D., entered Amherst college, he exposed himself to ridicule and jest by placing one of his fellow students by placing over the door of his room a large square of white cardboard on which was inscribed in bold outline the letter V.

The incident, which happened in his eight and bearing, was as follows: Two officers, total strangers, saw arrivals up country, rather untidy and bored, were awaiting luncheon.

If she cast down her eyes with a mingled of amateurish gawkiness, the fact is easily attributable to her inexperience. "I told you that I was not a staff, just joined—your youngest brother!"

BIG STRAWBERRIES.

Found on the Early Plants—Method of Training First Runners.

After cultivation of strawberries consists in keeping the soil well stirred to a depth of one to two inches, but not deeper, and all weeds removed.
