Strike News.

The antagonism of the citizen rkers and Mayor of McKeesport to the United States Steel Corporation resulted in a positive order last Friday, o dismantle the big W. Dewees Wood sheet plant and remove it at once to a site already selected in the Kiskiminetas Valley, between Vandergrift and Apollo. The directors of the Nationremoval of the National depart-winter.

The combine officials say that McKeesport is so saturated with anarchistic ideas that peaceful operation of its plants there is impossible unless with union men. They say that their purpose is to operate their plants to suit themselves, and that removal to a more peaceable community would soon repay
the loss and expense of effecting the removal.

At New Castle, Saturday, President Shaffer of the Amalgamated Association was given a wonderfully enthusiastic reception: but fewer men quit work that day than either the Steel Co or Amalgamated leaders anticipated and the belief was spreading that the six thousand men in the Tube works at McKeesport and as many more in the Steel works in South Chicago would not go out.

By Monday it became known that the Chicago men would not go out.

battles of Stone River and Chickamaugua and was with Sherman to Atlanta.

Gen. Negley was decended from patriotic Swiss ancestors, who left their own country during a religious war, went to Germany and later came to America. One member of the family was with General Braddock in his disastrous campaign against the French and Indians at Fort Duquesne. Three Negley brothers participated in the Seven Years' War and became heavy land owners in the East Liberty valley. General Negley was the grandson of General Alexander Negley, only son of Jacob Negley, Jr. his mother's maiden name was Scott, and he was born December 22, 1826, at the home of his parents. The house still stands on Collins avenue, and is now occupied by the Society for the Improvement of the Poor. When his father died he gave the boy, then but a few years old, into the care of his uncle. John Roup, and in what was the Roup homestead, the boy was raised. Part of the honse still standing was built in 1820.

After attending the public schools and the Western University, young Negley developed a martial spirit. When the war with Mexico broke out he was not yet of age, but he left his home to join the army, with William Winebiddle. They were members of the "Duquesne Greys," which became part of the First Pennsylvania, and young Negley made a fine record as a soldier under General Scott.

General Negley returned from Mexico just too late to attend the funeral of his only sister, Rebecca Roup Negley. During the interim between wars General Negley engaged in manufacturing pursuits and became a skillful horticulturist. When the civil war began he showed himself to be an efficient popular organizer of troops. Even before the war began he zealously sought to inaprove the National Guard of the State, and in December, 1860, four months before the first gun was fired, he offered the services of a division to the State authorities, stating that he could respond to a call in 24 hours.

On April 18, 1861. Governor Andrew G. Curtin authorized him to organize and equip a brigade of volunteers and in 10 days two regiments were ready. He accompanied the third regiment to the capital a few days later. His command was assigned to the Army of the Ohio, and he served in a number of important engagements as brigade commander, his regiments being the Ohio, and he served in a number of important engagements as brigade commander, his regiments being the Ohio, and he served in a number of important engagements as brigade commander, his regiments being the Ohio, and he served in a number of important engagements as brigade commander, his regiments being the Ohio, and he served in a number of important engagements as brigade commander, his regiments being the Ohio, and he served in a number of important engagements as brigade commanders, his regiments being the Ohio, and he served in a number of important engagements as brigade commanders, his regiments of the U. After the Civil War General Negley made rapid headway in the field of politics. In 1869 he was elected to Congress and two years later he was re-elected. He also served in the Fortyninth Congress in 1885 and 1887. At Washington he aggressively fought for visited his parents a few days last week.

Directly or indirectly General Negley was interested in a number of the Railboad lines of Western Pennsylvania. He was instrumental in the building of the Pittsburg & Western railroad and after became closely associated with the the Pittsourg & Western fairboad and later became closely associated with the late Calvin S.
