FEAR THOU NOT

A Tale of the French Revolution. There are few who have not heard or read of the great French revolution of the last century, when France was ruled by the government of France, when human life was of no account and when, as if wearied with its wickedness, God seemed to have hid his face from the sinful land.

No one may shut up the tears that were shed, the wounds that were made, the sufferings that were broken in those dreadful times, but here and there out of the great mass of human misery history has preserved a record of the trials and sufferings of some hapless ones, reading which we shudder and thank God that we live in happier days.

Some few years after the reign of terror, when France was made a republic, a man of middle age entered a small inn in Germany and called for refreshments. His manners were those of a gentleman, and he looked as if he might just have been covered from some terrible illness—he was so strangely, ghastly pale.

The landlord, who had seen him in his youth, and who had seen him in his old age, looked at him with a strange expression, and he said to the stranger, "Do you want to see the prison door?"

"No, nothing," said the pale man. "I have food and light and air. What would I want more?"

"My friend," said the landlord, "you speak as if you had known the want of these things. Have I guessed right?"

"Would you hear my tale?" he asked. "For years I have kept silent, but today it seems as if it would lighten my heart to speak. Listen and believe it if you can. Less than seven years ago I was a gay, light hearted youth in this our quiet fatherland. Having no near relations, I went to visit some distant ones who had lived for many years in a small town in France.

"My uncle, as I called him out of friendship, was kind, and well-to-do, and he had a small estate in the place, where he carried on the craft of a watchmaker, and he proposed that I should become his apprentice and live with him. I liked the little town, I liked my uncle, I liked my aunt, and I soon gave my consent. They had no children—my father had died, and my mother was kindly soul could not be content without young people around her, so she kept and clothed two house maids, children of some poor neighbors. The household was quiet and comfortable, and I was very happy. It seemed quite enough in a strange land.

"It was a happy household. No wonder I was glad to belong to it. But, alas, it was soon to be swept away by terrible affliction. For one day, one day, I heard of strange troubles going on in Paris and the large towns, but our little place was quiet. One morning, however, we were told that there had been a revolution in Paris, and that the king had been deposed. My father and mother were very busy over a discovery which he had made in his work, and we were less than usual in the streets.

"On the third day, however, he went out for a stroll to rest his eyes and look about him for a few moments, and he did not get a dozen yards from our house when I met our baker's wife, her eyes starting out of her head.

"Go back! she said. Go back! It is too late. The monster, the wreath, he has executed the honest man, without even the face of a trial, on the accursed guillotine yonder!"

"I was petrified with horror. Could she be speaking of my uncle, so respected, so quiet as he was? It was too true. The wretch in office had lost no time, but had begun his work of blood at once. My father and mother, and his first victim, his only crime being that he was of foreign birth and had sheltered under his roof some months since a poor Swiss, who had fled from his home. My aunt's anxious face met my troubled gaze. She had begun to suspect evil. The two girls walked fearfully in the background. I tried to speak, but I turned away and burst into tears. I was young then, Master Landlord, and had tears to shed. My aunt passed me by and rushed into the street straight to the market place. I could not follow. What happened there was told me later.

"With my agony at her husband's fate, my gentle, loving aunt had burst into a flood of reproach of his murder. In those days this was crime enough for the most heinous punishment, and before evening she had tarred his name as my uncle.

"The reign of terror had indeed begun with it. The girls had fled, terrified at the fate which had befallen their protectors, and I was meditating in a half stupor the way the same measure when a knock came at the door, and two men, who had often eaten and drunk at my uncle's table, came in and made me a prisoner, confining all the possessions of the family to the state.

"In those days a man's foes were often of his own household. I offered no resistance. The shock of the day had been too much for me, and I made certain that I, too, should die that night. But my time was not yet come.

"In consequence of the lateness of the hour I was taken to the town prison, a dismal building, which I had never known to be occupied. There I was thrust into a deep dungeon and left in

DO YOUR COWS PAY?

Read to Ascertain—Spring Balance For Weighing—Milk Tester. Granting that it takes nearly the same capital and practically the same amount of labor whether the return from a herd is large or small and that from every point of view a good small herd is much more profitable than a large poor one, the question arises what a farmer with a herd of dairy cows is to do.

First of all he should find out not only what his herd collectively, but what each cow is doing. In other words, he should begin a record of both the quantity and the quality of milk produced by each cow and the means for keeping the record are available to every farmer. The milk tester, which is a simple means of determining the richness of the milk in fat, and the scales of spring balance for determining the yield of milk enable any dairyman to ascertain the value for milk and butter production of each cow in his herd and whether she is a source of profit or loss. The scales will show the total amount of milk produced in a year and the tester its fat contents.

An individual record shows whether or not the farmer is boarding the cow and drawing on the profit from the better cows in order to do it. The amount of guesswork can take its place.

FERTILIZING IN THE FALL.

Feed the Strawberry and the Grain. Corn Fertilizer For Small Farms. I believe in feeding the strawberry heavily in the fall. The strawberry is a heavy feeder and it is the amount of fertilizer that it takes that determines the yield of milk enable any dairyman to ascertain the value for milk and butter production of each cow in his herd and whether she is a source of profit or loss.

The fruit buds which are to produce next year's crop are started about the first of September or October. Some growers believe that the crop is completed from bud to berry in the short spring season. That is an error. I am sure that the fruit buds will be formed in the next sixty days, and the plant must truly "work like sixty" to produce them. It will need potash and phosphoric acid in particular, and should be fed. Where one is using chemicals I think most of the potash and phosphoric acid might well be spread in fall or winter provided some green crop is left to grow. On our hilly farm it would be folly to use much nitrogen in the fall. If I were to use stable manure in the fall, I should plow it in and let it lie on top of the ground. On level land or that with a gentle slope this advice would not be entirely sound.

Perhaps Your Pasture Needs Help. The severe drought has been hard on pastures, both on account of lack of moisture and on account of overstocking. The soil is killed out in places, and weeds are getting a head start. Some of these pastures could be prolonged by some attention right now. The best way to control weeds is to crowd them out, and there is no better plan than to crowd them out with a heavy growth of timothy or clover. In September, no matter if the weather is dry, a grain drill with sharp wheels should be run over all thin patches in the pasture, distributing one-fourth to one-third of a bushel of timothy seed an acre in connection with 200 pounds of a high grade acid phosphate. The drill holes will cut the thin sod so that some of the seed will find fresh soil for starting when the fall rains come, and the trash of the old sod will furnish some winter protection to the new plants. If some stable
