BISMARCK'S BITTERNESS.

The Way the Prince Spoke of His Henry Villard, writing in the Century of a visit to Bismarck, says: After describing his estate the prince began speaking English—"so that that fellow," pointing to the coachman, "may not understand us"—and surprised me by his fluency, his command of idiomatic expressions and his very slight accent. He began with these words, "Since I have been kicked out of office," which so astonished me that I begged pardon for interrupting him and said, "Prince, that is an Americanism; where did you pick it up?" He answered that he did not re-member where, but the expression fitted his case exactly, for the manner of his dismissal was but the equivalent of an application of the toe of a boot. He then proceeded to tell the story of his forced resignation. Such a rapid flow of keen wit, of cutting sarcasm and bitter denuncia-tion as followed for half an hour I had never heard before and never heard again. It was a strange mixture of eloquence and loquaciousness. Bis-marck's voice seemed not as deep and strong as his stature led one to expect, but it had a pleasant sound. A most in-tense sense of the wrong and ingratitude he claimed to have suffered made itself manifest. As an example of his There was not only an unhesitating assertion of his own deserts as the founder of the German empire, but an almost sneering and even contemptu-ous depreciation of other performers in the historic drama of his time, including even the old Emperor William, the unfortunate Emperor Frederick and the Empresses Augusta and Frederick. His language became a perfect diatribe when he referred to the em-peror and some of his ministers, whom he held responsible for his removal. His expressions regarding them were not only amazing but embarrassing to me, as I had close social relations with many of the ministerial objects of his scorn. "Some of those rogues I picked out of the very gutter," he once said. Fortunately he did not stop for any word of assent, but went right on until his pent up wrath was expended. As he remarked when it was all spent "It was quite a relief to me to have this opportunity to speak without re-straint to a gentleman who, I am sure, will honor my confidence."

Even were it not for this restriction ome of the sayings I heard and noted down at the time were so extraordinary that if they were repeated their reality would probably be doubted, and certainly the leze majesty they involved would render it unsafe for me to ven ture again on German soil.

According to tradition, Kenith, the legendary king of Scotland, was allured to his death in a most novel manner. Kenith had slain a son and brother of Fennella, who to be avenged ordered Wiltus, a famous silversmith, to construct a death dealing statue of silver.

In its right hand the statue held a basin and in the left hand an apple of pure gold, both set with diamonds and other precious stones.

To touch the apple was to defy death it being so arranged that any one guilty of such vandalism would be immediately riddled by poisoned arrows shot from openings in the body of the statue Kenith was invited to inspect the wonder, and, as Fennella had hoped, he tried to pluck the precious imitation

Experiences Which Physiological An uncle of mine with whom I was walking in a part of Yorkshire near Skipton, where neither of us had ever been before, stopped suddenly to say, "When we turn that corner you will see on the right an Elizabethan house partly surrounded by trees, with a lake or large pond showing through them, and in the middle of the water a little Cooper & Croft, store.... tificial island."

When we turned the corner we saw precisely what he had described, and yet he had never seen or heard or read of the place. The dual brain theory fails here, since neither lobe of the brain had received an impression of the place before we turned the corner.

Jean Jacques Rousseau in his "Conessions" says he foresaw in a reverie while taking a solitary walk all the incidents of the happiest day of his life as they occurred eight years later: "I saw myself, as in an ecstasy, transported into that happy time and Owens E L, store...... Shields Mrs Fannie, store. all the happiness possible, enjoyed it with inexpressible raptures, without thinking of anything sensual. I do not remember being ever thrown into the future with more force or an illusion o complete as that which I then experienced. What struck me most in the recollection of that reverie, now that it has been realized, is to have found objects so exactly as I had picured them. If ever the dream of a nan awake had the air of a prophetic vision that was assuredly such." It is, I think, noteworthy that in all lairvoyant cases of this kind the body through overwork or ill health or fasting or congenitally in the subdued state to which the Indian mystic and miracle monger reduces his own by maceration. It was so with Scott and when he had the following experience ecorded in his memoir. out with overwork he was shown into a certain room in a certain part of London where he had never been be-

"On looking around everything appeared perfectly familiar to me. I seemed to recognize every object. I said to myself: 'What is this? I was never here before, and yet I have seen all this, and if so there is a very peculiar knot in the shutter.' I opened the shutter and found the knot. Now, hen, I thought, here is something I cannot explain on my principles; there must be some power beyond matter." And from being a pronounced materialist he became a believer in spirits, and, indeed, eventually a profoundly religious soul.-T. P.'s London Weekly.

An Isolated Church. In the valley of Westdale Head, in Cumberland, England, a strange little church nestles amid a group of the highest of England's mountains. It is over 400 years old and has two winows, and the pulpit is lighted by a a hole in the roof above it. There are only eight pews, of which seldom more than two are used. The little bell, hanging loose in the open belfry, may on stormy nights be heard mingling its tones with the wind and thunder. But for the belfry it would hardly be known to be a church. This little gray edifice is described as the most olated church throughout the whole of England.
