THE HIGH PRIVILEGE OF THE VOTER.

John Brishen Butler in the Cosmopolitan.

When American citizenship shall have reached its highest development, the duty of voting will no longer be a careless, perfunctory, ill-studied and hastily performed act.

There will be a preparatory ceremony, in which the citizen will stand before his fellow men and, with uplifted hand, solemnly affirm that in exercising the high duties devolving upon him as a voter, he—

Has studied with diligence the issues presented for decision; Will cast his vote without prejudice, without personal bias, without influence by money or promise of any personal advantage, direct or indirect; Will, in casting his vote, have regard solely and entirely to the benefit of the country at large, if the vote be national, or of local, with reference to the good of the community.

Eventually the voter will come to recognize that a failure to fulfill this duty earnestly, thoroughly and with high integrity, should expose him to the contempt of his fellow citizens, and should disfranchise him from the exercise of the high privilege of voting—and income, and suffering in a thousand ways.

After solemnly making this affirmation in the presence of his fellow citizens, the voter proceeds to the secrecy of the voting booth, who doubts that he will not, in nine cases out of ten, act differently from the careless, thoughtless, self-seeking or corrupt man who, without regard to his vote the destiny of our Republic.

Within the past twenty years, corruption at the polls has increased with a rapidity that appals those who have read the history of the republics of Rome and Greece. Something must be done to prevent the average citizen from being indifferent to and ignorant of the power contained in his vote. Men must be educated systematically through village societies, and above all, the public schools must take up the training of the child to the importance of the function which he will some day exercise as a citizen.

Penalties for bribery at the polls are already severe. But in every town there must be a society whose business it is to pursue the briber and the bribed until the doors of the penitentiary close upon them. And the only legal way for a citizen to secure the high responsibility entrusted to him.

And if it continues to go unchecked, bribery at the polls will overthrow the Republic.
