The eruptions of the Volcano, Vesnvius, near Naples, have became so frequent and violent that no tourists are allowed to approach it. Red hot stones, of large size are shot up hundreds of feet in the air, while a broad stream of lava is flowing from the crater. The case of Vesnvius affords proof that there is no marked diminution of Volcanic activity in the crust of the earth Before the famous eruption took place which buried Pompeli and Herculaneum, Vesnvius was regarded as an extinct volcano, there being no historic record of an eruption. The mountain was cultivated to the summit, and the possibility of danger never occurred to the inhabitants of its slopes. Since that great calamity it has never ceased to be active, and eruptions occur periodically.

ACCIDENTS.

Fifty-four people instantly killed and a hundred and twenty seriously injured was the first count after a railroad wreck in Tennessee last Saturday, on the Southern R. R., near Knoxville. The latest danger to the traveling public is dynamite. Near Boston the other day a box of dynamite jolted off the wagon in which it was hauled and with the peculiar capriciousness of that compound it reserved its explosive powers till it was struck by a trolley ear; and on Friday, near Cumberland a load of the same stuff got in front of a railroad train with results just as fatal. Fast freight No. 94 on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad struck a wagon loaded with 750 pounds of dynamite at the crossing at North Branch, W. Va., jour miles east of Cumberland. The sale of four warships to Russia by Argentina is liable to cause some international complications. Japan herself bought two cruisers from Argentina, but that was before the outbreak of the war, so that the transaction is not open to question. Now that a state of war exists, all instruments of war are absolutely contraband, and in selling warships to Russia, Argentina has committed an act of hostility toward Japan for which she is responsible.
