Thanksgiving.

The first National Thanksgiving was proclaimed by George Washington on the third day of October, 1789, according to the request of a joint committee of both Houses of Congress "to recommend to the people of the United States a day of public thanksgiving and prayer to be observed by acknowledging with grateful hearts the many signal favors of Almighty God, especially by affording them an opportunity peaceably to establish a form of government for themselves and for their posterity."

The custom gradually fell into disuse until 1863, when it was revived by President Lincoln, and since then the last Thursday in November has been one of our National holidays. It is very strange that there have been persons who tried to make the day a national holiday, and that a book was written in the attempt to prove it. In their testimony they have carefully refrained from quoting his official messages. In his first inaugural he announced his "firm reliance on Him who has never forsaken his faithful subjects."

WAR NOTES.

Increased activity along the Shalke river indicates the imminence of another great battle. The present rest or relative strength of the two armies is unknown to outsiders, but it is known that both armies have been heavily reinforced, and that the Russians are becoming restive as the advantage of day there is now with the Japs. In the trenches armies, also, lose heavily by disease, and the Japs know better how to take care of themselves than do the Russians. The sanitary arrangements of the Japs are the most efficient on record, and their losses from sickness are practically nothing. On Tuesday the Japs were reported to have captured an important Pass, but were repulsed in an attempt to take Lone Tree hill.

The czar received an important message from General Stoesel, which is so strongly holding the fort at Port Arthur, last Wednesday, which must have been of exceptional importance, judging from the circumstances by which its delivery was attended. Communications with the beleaguered citadel have been maintained throughout the siege with considerable regularity by means of balloons and aeroplanes to and from the station maintained by the Russian Consul, and when for any reason that has not been available, through the instrumentality of Chinese fugitives and blockade runners, but in this case the Russian general was unwilling to entrust his dispatches to methods or messengers rendering them liable to be intercepted. For their conveyance he employed the destroyer Rastoropy, which took desperate chances of reaching its destination.

Left Port Arthur at midnight during a blinding snowstorm, and was blown back to the fall of a bar. Good management, through the mines with which the entrance to the harbor is strewn. It arrived at Chefoo, China, some time the following forenoon. Its captain at once put his message on the wire and upon learning that two Japanese destroyers had been seen in the vicinity gave orders for the immediate destruction of his vessel in order to prevent its falling into the hands of the enemy. This was in pursuance of his instructions and in execution of plans which had been previously made, and the question naturally arises, what could have been the message sent by the Russian general to the Japanese?

The school house. (Reminiscence of the old school house that stood below Maharg. Major Anderson and Eugene Ferrero were teachers.)

I love to remember when I was a barefoot boy. I arose each morning my heart overjoyed with the thought that I was a stranger to sorrow and sin. I cared not if my old hat had no rim. But even the joys of a boy will come to an end.

I was afraid of the teacher as anyone else. I was more afraid of the girls laughing at me. These girls were a terror to me when I was a boy. But as I grew older they were my chief joy. I remember well one of those girls. With her long brown eyes and long silken curls. If I had studied my books as well as I did her sweet face. I might have risen in this world to a much higher place.

Those girls led me captive at their own sweet will. With all their love they pointed out to me the beauty of Mars hung in space. It is not so beautiful to me as was this fair girl's face.

They say up in Heaven great changes in our looks are made. But it is only the man-surely not the maid. I have friends in Heaven whom I hope to see. In them I wish no changes to be.

I have lived many years. I have had both pleasure and pain. It grieves me now I can never be a boy again. Time turns backward if only for one day. And make me an innocent boy again engaged at my play.

Prugh was born in Maryland in 1822, and spent most of his early days near Dayton, Ohio, as boy on farm, school teacher, minister, etc., until coming to Butler about 18 years ago. Parts of his address were quite humorous and were well received by the members.

On motion Mr. Samuel S. Bell the Vice President, was requested to address the association at its next meeting.

On motion adjourned to meet in one month, Saturday, Dec. 17, at 2 p. m. in the same place.

Two well-known drovers of New Concord, O., named McKee and Wilson, were killed by a railroad collision at Wyaland, Pa., last Saturday. One of the victims gave his consent to have his foot chopped off with an ax in an attempt to save his life from the flames of the wrecked engine.

S. H. Pierson, member of the Popular National Executive committee, of West Va., who had been his party's candidate for governor, was killed by a B. & O. shifting engine, last Saturday, while walking towards Parkersburg, from his home in the country.

Clifford Hopp, of Franklin twp., had a leg broken by the fall of a bar. Good management, through the mines with which the entrance to the harbor is strewn. It arrived at Chefoo, China, some time the following forenoon. Its captain at once put his message on the wire and upon learning that two Japanese destroyers had been seen in the vicinity gave orders for the immediate destruction of his vessel in order to prevent its falling into the hands of the enemy.

William and James Brown, of Brady, were leading hay, last Saturday afternoon, James, who was in the wagon, was killed by the fall of a bar. Beef Iron and Wine.
Our famous system builder and general tonic makes rich, red blood and tones the various organs. Easy to take and quick to act. A warm glow can be felt stealing to the finger tips with almost the first dose.

Don't You Need a Tonic?
Are you weak, tired, run down, nervous, with thin blood, pale lips, and no appetite? If so, take a bottle; it brightens the eyes and makes red cheeks.
