

You Live but Once. Most of Your Life is Spent in Your Home, Why Not Make it Attractive?

A piece here and there will change the whole appearance of he gloomiest home. A new carpet works a greater change than nything else—or instead of an entire new one a rug will hide the yorn place and brighten up the room wonderfully. We have uniture and carpeting that will harmonize with your present xtures, no matter what they are.

As August is our dull month, we will not refuse any reasonable rice—even at sacrifice of our profits—to move goods. There are ozens of bargains all over this store. In all lines we are offering eavy reductions to move goods—as our fall stock will be coming a soon. We must have room.

the developing scales. Use of Soaps. The practical result of all the experi ments in which various kinds of soaps were tested during the summer is that, except for the straight whale oil soap, with or without tobacco, nothing proluced any satisfactory result at a rea estimation. There were too many people who had undoubtedly injured trees by using them. The successes that were scored failed to count. And yet about the only really satisfactory results that were obtained against the San Jose or pernicious scale on other than peach or plum trees were obtained by the use of crude oil of the proper specific gravity—that is, 43 degrees Beaume. It was emphasized again that on the pear especially the oil produced a beneficial effect that seems to be equal to the beneficial ef-fect produced by the lime and sulphur nixtures on the peach, and that there s practically no danger where any thing like reasonable care is used in making the application. For best re-sults the oil should be just a little It then sprays much more readily, the same amount will cover a larger area, and the effect upon the insects seems to be greater. etroleum seems to be most effective Kerosene and Limoid Mixtures. Kerosene has not been much use during the past few years. It seem to be coming into favor again, how ever, since it has been found that i might be combined with water me nically, without the necessity of having a special pump, and withou the work of making a chemical emul-sion. The emulsifying agent in this ease, if the mixture can be called an emulsion, is a preparation of magne-sium limestone called limoid. The limoid and kerosene mixtures are worthy of a careful trial and offer a fair prospect of good results. Prepared Oil to Mix With Water. Heretofore in order to spray the of over a larger surface and thereby to revent injury to the tree we have e ther put on the material combined with water in a mechanical mixture or we have combined the oil with soap to form an emulsion. The com aps unfortunately do not act even ly and sometimes upset all calculation by first spraying water, then oil. Chem ists have been seeking for some meth-od of chemically treating the crude oil so that it will mix directly with water, and that method has been found at the present time. I have on the way now two lots of oil treated by a process that makes it perfectly miscible with water. One lot is high grade Pennsylvania oil, the other lot is Texas heavy oil with an asphaltum base and considerabl

I did not myself use the boiled mixture of lime and sulphur, but I have been informed by several who have used it that it was very satisfactory. They used it at winter strength, omitting the salt, and seemed to find that the lime and sulphur alone may be used at nearly winter strength without especial damage, except on the more tender kinds of leaves. As the result of all the work done I do not feel that it is possible to recommend either of the lime and sulphur when the head aches hard and throbs; when the neck and eyes grow stiff, the face flushes or grows deadly white; when any excitement or over effort brings on an attack of nervous head-trimings on an a
