TURNING THE TABLE. By VIRGINIA LEILA WENTZ. Copyright, 1905, by Virginia Leila Wentz.

In the beginning Greta had dreamed of romantic love and army or navy officers. That was while her father lived. When he died, falling to leave either her mother or her a red copper-

As for Greta Weston—well, the young creature who God permitted him to call to wife was to John a being from a world he had never known!

"I'm sorry, but you see I'm not much of a beggar," began John Westcott. "Oh, we know," he observed Mrs. Westcott, "but we'll do what we can to polish you, at least to save you from being ridiculous."

"I should like to know," he said, glancing over the congregation, "how many women in this assembly have not spoken a harsh word to their husbands during the past four weeks?"

"Indeed," he went on, "I am so anxious to know that I shall ask that all the women who have been so wise to their feet and be counted."

"It was a little accident, dear," he wouldn't get angry," he reproached soothingly, at least very sorry and very much regretted at himself.

"Don't call me 'my dear,'" she flashed back. "I don't see you I might as well say you first as last!"

"Greta, Greta!" cried Mrs. Westcott warningly. But Greta, for the first time in her life, was beyond the first of expediency.

man's nature went immediately out to the human trifle in blue ribbons and the face which the nurse held on a pillow for his inspection.

John's son and heir grew and thrived daily. Life for the first time since his marriage again became invested with a meaning for John, and God existed after all!

From the moment of her child's birth Greta had felt a tenderness toward John—the tenderness of a wife who has borne a man a son. Now she was beginning to feel other things.

"No, no!" she cried, as one who really suffers. "I don't mean that way. I want you to love me as you used to."

"I'm just longing to have you come and kiss me—when you don't have to, you know."

"I'm sorry, but you see I'm not much of a beggar," began John Westcott. "Oh, we know," he observed Mrs. Westcott, "but we'll do what we can to polish you, at least to save you from being ridiculous."

HE AVERTED A PANIC. A REMARKABLE CASE OF BRAVERY AND PRESENCE OF MIND. Matsuki, the Juggler, Held an Audience Spellbound While the Theatre Attacked by Fire.

Matsuki, the Juggler, Held an Audience Spellbound While the Theatre Attacked by Fire. Satsuma Matsuki, a Japanese juggler and acrobat, was filling an engagement at Burlington.

It was Saturday evening. Satsuma Matsuki had been performing for an hour. He had astonished his audience with a series of wonderful achievements, but as yet he had not performed with the table resting on his feet.

Matsuki passed into one of the dressing rooms to change his costume. So far he had closed the door when he heard a sound that made his heart stand still for a moment—a crackling and a hissing—and the next instant a long tongue of flame leaped from the doorway, enveloping a window.

"No, no!" she cried, as one who really suffers. "I don't mean that way. I want you to love me as you used to."

"I'm sorry, but you see I'm not much of a beggar," began John Westcott. "Oh, we know," he observed Mrs. Westcott, "but we'll do what we can to polish you, at least to save you from being ridiculous."

proved the saying of the Spanish sage regarding the catching of old birds with chaff. He left his perch and descended to get a better view of the trouble. First he himself too near for comfort, he flew back again. Then he lost his head with the others and, flapping hither and thither in his ungainly fashion, soon found himself upon the ground.

Moving a condor, or any of the other birds, for that matter, from the outdoor flying cage to the warmer winter quarters, and vice versa, is a job requiring a great deal of care.

"You must keep your head level when carrying a condor," remarked one of the keepers. "You can't let yourself get nervous when you feel his wings pushing out under your arms."

Queer Nubia, Where the Inhabitants Never Take a Bath. The masser had just returned from Nubia, the birthplace of massage.

"I didn't learn as much as I expected to," he said, "but I got hold of two movements that will eradicate wrinkles and remove fat in an incredible way."

"Nubia is a queer place. They have so little water there that they never take baths. The masser, or kneading, whence our word 'massage,' is the bath's substitute. You strip, lie down and are covered from head to foot with a cream of olive oil, mutton fat, mink, sandalwood powder and certain plant juices. Then you are kneaded, your joints are massaged. I studied the Nubian movements thoroughly and learned, as I said, good things."

"The Nubians are a handsome and queer race. They hunt elephants with the sword. A hunter steals upon a sleeping elephant and slashes him in the back of the neck, inches above the hoof. This cut severs the artery, and the elephant bleeds to death."

"The Nubians are shapely and handsome. They never wrinkle, they never get fat, their skin is smooth and fine. They impute these graces to the 'masser'—the massage—that they take regularly three or four times a week. Every masseur ought to go to Nubia if he wants to learn his business thoroughly."

Where Vessels Have Eyes. Painted on the prow of nearly all the junks, or Chinese sailing vessels, are to be seen huge eyes. It is believed by the superstitious inhabitants of China that if the eye, which is raised, as in relief, was not there the vessel could not see where to go and would therefore come to destruction.
