Supposed Black Hand Murder.

Kaylor, the mining town in Armstrong county, near the Butler county line, and the terminal of the Allegheny & Western Railroad, has a peculiar murder mystery, on hands. A few nights ago a youth of 19 walked into the boarding house of his stepfather, Tony Salto, and saying, "I am shot," showed a bullet hole in his breast, near the heart. About the same time Frank Pergano entered his boarding, house, nearby, in an excited manuer. "What have you done?" asked the landlord.
"You had better keep quiet, too," Pargano responded, and, gathering a few clothes together, he left the house. Salto's stepson was sent to the hoshital at Mercer, where he died.
Relatives of the young man refuse to give any facts in the case, even refusing to divulge his name. County Detective Coller has made an information against Pargano, charging him with murder.
The young man is said to have told his stepfather to take no steps in the case, as any one who tried to avenge him would also be killed. It is thougt he was shot by a member of the Black Hand society.
