 School Notes.

 At the meeting of the Butler School Board, last Friday evening, six plans for a High School building, drawn by six architects were inspected; and the Board listened to Supt. Gibson's account of the different High School buildings that the complete realization of all circus day calls for and promises. Rather, there has been greater effort than ever before to make the pageant of the present as seen more inspiringly beautiful and novel than those that have gone before. With the complete reconstruction of these newer shows the task became comparatively easy, merely calling for a financial outlay in proportion to that in other departments. The thousand people and the four hundred horses week—Friday evening.
