In a recent builetin of the Colorado station P. K. Blinn reports the discovery by a local grower of a rust resistng cantaloupe which promises to be of the Rocky Ford variety was purchased rom five different seedsmen. They vere planted and cultivated under similar conditions. When rust attacked the field just before the melons be-

Many of the hills from this train of Rocky Ford seed remained green throughout the season and proced a good crop of melons. Further observations in the muskmelon fields of that neighborhood also showed that erever this strain of Rocky Ford seed ad been used many hills were unaf fected with rust, while with other strains of seed of the same variety the ines were all dead.

Mr. Blinn selected a quantity of seed rom the rust resistant hills and plantem in comparison with ordinar "On the rust resisting hills th melons were hidden under a healthy growth of vines and were large, solidv netted, with thick, firm flesh, small seed cavity completely filled with seed. On the rusted hills the plants were almost devoid of leaves and the small melons were prematurely ripe, with thin, watery flesh, large, open seed alue." (Figs. 1 and 2.)

In tracing back the history of this train of seed it was found that some ears before a seedsman had saved he first lot from a single healthy don taken from a field of rusted meion taken from a head of rusted viries. It had therefore been developed by the simple process of saving seed from the best melons produced by plants which withstood attacks of rust when surrounding plants were destroy-ed by this disease. What was thus ac-complished by one farmer with one crop can probably be accomplished by other farmers with the same or with other crops if they will be alert while the crops are growing to select and mark individual plants which show exceptional merit along the lines of prolific yield, early maturity, resist-ance to disease or other desirable qual-ity and save seed separately from the plant showing such qualities. Marked variations which may be profitably ap-the farmer. He is in his fields, garden ceptional plants are produced. If one plant in a rust infected wheatfield stands up green and free from the disease, that is a plant to save seed from as a basis of a rust resistant strain. If one hill of potatoes in a blighted field remains unaffected by disease, seed from that hill may produce a blight resistant variety. If a squash plant is found that is distaste ful to the squash bug, seed from that hill may produce squash vines which the bugs will not molest.

Manure In Summer. One of the many seasonable prob-lems that are presented to the farmer is how to dispose of the stable manur which accumulates during the summe season. Last year I applied what ma nure I could get from the stables to a piece of buckwheat sown on a wheat stubble turned under. The buckwheat and grass were sowed July 31, or about that date. I got a pretty good crop of buckwheat, much better buckwheat where the manure was applied than where it was not, and the manure shows plainly on the grass this season. There will be at least one-third heavier grass where the manure was applied, says an

Professor Jones of Vermont calls at tention to the fact that several new sorts of potatoes of reputed diseas resistance have recently been placed on the market—Snowball, Ionia Seedling, Vermont Gold Coin and Norcross Star of the East and Babbitt—and rec ommends those who have opportunity to carefully observe the relative disease resistance of these and also of other new varieties.
