Ordered by Mail

By Troy Allison Copyright, 1906, by M. M. Cunningham Mrs. Johnson, coming unexpectedly into the dining room, where the new girl was laying the cloth for dinner...

"Have you been crying, Johanna?" she asked kindly. "Ach, it is not much," the woman said, a refractory tear starting down her cheek...

"This is your room," he said simply. "Mine is across the hall, where I can hear if you get afraid and cry."

"I hope you'll feel homelike and will grow to love the farm—and maybe some time—me," he added timidly.

"I like it all—and you," she answered softly. "Ladies and gentlemen," said the lecturer after bowing to the first round of applause that followed his introduction...

"Excuse me, professor," interrupted the harassed little man who was almost hidden away in the corner, "but how many boys have you had since you were a child?"

"Well, er, um—well, the fact is, sir, I have no children at all," stammered the lecturer.

"That's all right, then," said the little man, sinking back into his seat. "I was afraid you had a few of 'em, and if you had I knowed it was a chinch you didn't know nothing about raising 'em."

"You kin go ahead and fill 'em, 'cause I'm lookin' for expert advice on the subject."

"I have had many a personal appeal from the old favorites in the way of amusement as all being rejuvenated, and the same old plan that it is profitable in their new attire."

"It is so much more," she gasped in her halting English, "even the cows that in the farmyard stand."

"He led her into the house and paused before a sweet, clean room whose marble curtains blew in and out the open windows."

"This is your room," he said simply. "Mine is across the hall, where I can hear if you get afraid and cry."
