Men of experience always do this. It saves money and saves work, too. We'll explain paint points at length if you will drop in on us some day—before you paint this season.

We are sole agents for the paint you get without oil—and mix. It is the famous Hammar Condensed Paint. Gallon of paint, gallon of oil. Simple enough. Absolutely fresh and new. Guaranteed for five years. We can show you in two minutes how Hammar Condensed Paint will save you money, at least 25 per cent in cost and 100 per cent in wearing qualities.

BOTH PHONES SUMMER FALLOW.

Intensive Farming Has Forced It Off the Eastern Programme. The summer fallow has been somewhat of a fad in this country at va-lieved in the practice who have never felt that they could afford it, says a writer in Country Gentleman.

Careful observation and experiment, however, are demonstrating that this practice, borrowed from the best English agriculturists, is not an advantageous one to introduce in any considerable portion of our country. The greater heat and dryness of our summers render the condition of fallowed land wholly different from that which results from similar treatment in the cool and moist climate of Great Britain. There the conditions favor an improvement of texture and an increase of available fertility with every strain of the cool and moist climate of Great Britain. Shade and Mulch.

I have always wondered whether there really was any advantage in fallowing as compared with the working which the land gets when a well cultivated crop of corn is raised. I have also noticed that thick and heavy growths of corn seem to exhaust the land less rapidly than thin and poor crops. Of late years we have heard so much of the dust mulch that other variations of the mulching practice or idea have been partially forgotten. I suspect that we are approaching the time when the great value of the cowpea and similar quick growing, hot weather plants will be recognized to be almost as much in the shading of the soil and the physical effect of their root development as in the chemical walls of the age say of them. their root development as in the chemical value of the root nodules.

Horses are and have for some tim ast been selling for good prices, and e indications are that all the horses that our farmers can raise will be required at prices that will pay them rell provided they raise the right kind. The heavy draft horse is the most likely to prove profitable for the average rmer to raise. There are several asons why I make this statement: 1. The heavy mare is most suitable or the average work on the farm.

2. The heavy colt can be broken into vork and will earn his keep at a young-

3. The work on the farm is well suited to fit a heavy horse for future use-fulness when sold to go into our large owns and cities for dray purposes.

4. There are few farmers who have time and experience to raise more than ne out of ten light horses that is ally first class, and even then they are not likely to get what it is worth; but some dealer is likely to reap much the greater profit.—J. Gardhouse.

One of the desires evermore spring ing up in the heart of the live stoc wner is for green feed in the late at tumn and early spring, In the search for such a feed let th uestion be raised as to the availabil ty of rye, that most excellent small grain which has almost been "damned by faint praise" or by being ignored. It has deserved no such fate, and the farmer who thrives by the practice of economical methods will give it a re newed thought. If rye is sown in Au gust and September it usually affords most excellent pasturage by October. and in the milder climates stock ma run upon it during any part of the winter when snow does not cover in over. In the spring, about the time when the cows are becoming "fresh, it is always available for use, which is true of no other grain except whea at this early season.
