From the New Yorker. WOMAN'S LOVE.

BY DR. M. M. PENDLETON. WHERE, 'mid the world's tempestuous sea, Shall man's frail bark in safety be? In what calm haven may it rest, No more by winds or waves distress'd? Where raging storms supinely lie, Nor clouds bedim the spirit's sky: Say, be there 'neath you lofty dome So sweet a place, so safe a home!

Yes, on the ocean's wild, wild wave, Where tempest-waters-proudly-lave, A lovely islet rears its head Serenely from the sea's deep bed ; And round that islet's gentle base The waves lie down with mirrored face; And in its wildest, deepest cove, Is the retreat of Woman's Love.

Here all the passions of the soul Are calmed by some supreme control * Which o'er that lovely bay presides, And moves its winds and swells its tides; For only angel-forms are seen To lave beneath the golden sheen: That dances brightly on the wave, In triumph o'er the tempest's grave.

Nor shall it be a meteor's glare That flickers in the midnight air, And soon goes out, to shine no more Upon that ocean's pebbly shore; For Woman's Love lives on to death, And struggles with her dying breath-Clinging in fervor to the last, Till hope is crushed beneath the blast. Warrenton, Ga. Oct. 24, 1837.
