Drawing Lessons

For Schools, Lyceums, and Families. The following are among the reasons why Drawing is an appropriate branch of common education, and of course, deserving of general attention, both in schools and families. 1. It is extensively applicable to the common.

pursuits of life, especially the mechanical arts, and civil engineering; as it is to nearly every department of science.

2. Experience has fully proved that Drawing and Writing are learned in connexion sooner and better, than Writing is or can be separately. 3. A daily exercise in writing descriptions of various objects, both of nature and art, in addition to drawing them, furnishes practical and highly useful lessons in Spelling, Grammar, and Composition, which render pupils more thorough in those important branches of education, than they can ever become, by merely committing to mem-ory spelling book columns, and the abstract definitions and rules of grammar.

4. If a large portion of the exercises, both on benefit of the Insolvent Laws, and the Court six and so ineffectual in school instructions, has appointed the second Monday of April;

(being the 9th) next for the hearing of us and our creditors.

5. The combined exercise of drawing and describing objects, leads children to think—to observe, examine and understand various departments of nature and art; and thus constantly stores their minds with useful and entertaining knowledge, and protects them from the numerous isfortunes of ignorance and vice.

"First Lessons in Drawing" on a sheet, and "First Lessons in Dalwing" on a sheet, and the same figures in a box of "Dalwing Caits," by Josiah Holbrook, furnish appropriate lessons in this elementary and useful department of instruction, and introduce pupils to a great variety of exercises in Spelling, Penmanship, Grammar, and composition, which are alike interesting and instructive to children, whether in school or at home. They are well calculated to aid parents in the great and responsible but which parents have tested. in the great and responsible, but much neglected duties of domestic education.

For using the sheet and cards in schools, many teachers have adopted the plan of substituting them for one-half the exercises in copy writing, usually pursued by their pupils: others use them instead of lessons in grammar or composition, for which the descriptive exercises answer, as much more than a substitute.

In families they are readily used by children without any instruction from parents, though such instruction is, of course, an aid and encouragement to the juvenile efforts of the ever inquiring and ever active minds and hands of these aident lovers, and untiring seekers after useful and entertaining knowledge;
The most useful and the most interesting application made of these drawings and description when completed, is sending them, by way of ex-change, to other schools and other states and countries. They have already been sent, in great numbers, to the four quarters of the globe.

Tublished and sold by W. Marshall & Co. corner of Market and Seventh streets, Philad'a.

Among the friends of education who have manifested a special interest on the subject and mode of teaching here presented, are those whose names are annexed.

Mr. Josiah Holbrook, the well-known founder of the Lyceum system, and the untiring advocate and friend of popular education, has lately prepared a very desirable series of Drawing Cards. These contain thirty-six finely executed drawings in outline, consisting of geometrical drawings in outline, consisting of geometrical lines and figures, the more common implements
