During that period he has gleaned from the public crib something Tike $40,000, and he is still crying "give! give!", He is actuated by no high-motive for the public good, but acts solely from a desire to enrich himself at the expense of the people. He has been a member of the Legislature, but while in that body he never distinguished himself either as a statesman or as a useful man of business. It is said that he now holds the office of Major General of the Huntingdon and Mifflin militia, but we have never heard of any deeds of high and chivalrous daring performed by him in that capa- Craighead, city, save indeed his masterly "retreat" through the back-door of a tavern in Lewistown; but his friends call him General, thinking thereby to gull the people and catch votes, as they know that the citizens of Pennsylvania delight to honor men who have served their country in a military capacity. He also holds the office of Senator of this state, and refuses to resign, although the loco focos say they are confident o electing him Governor. He, however, knows better, and will hold on to his present office, as he thinks the one in perspective rather uncertain. The Convention of Democratic Young Men whiel lately met at Reading, was the largest convention ever assembled in this state. It was a most enthusiastic meeting; hope was depicted in every countenance; the utmost unanimity prevailed, and every thing was done with an eye single to the prosperity of the state.—

There were nearly three thousand delegates present, and among the whole there was but one sentiment prevailed, that of a fixed determination to support Joseph Ritner, and by doing so guard well the true interests of the whole state.

It was indeed a noble sight to behold so many young men, from all sections of this wide-spread Common wealth, assembled together; and, to use the language of Edward Joy Monars, in his eloquent speech on that occasion, "it resembled the vast primary meetings of the ancient Greeks, when they met together to watch over the interests of their country." The minions of Van Buren-were startled at this unexpected display of strength, intelligence and patriotism. For the Herald & Expositor. Mn. Or their resources are such, that when depression and disappointment do scize on one branchof business, they can lay hold of and sustain themselves by means of another. And when all fail, they try to turn the confusion and derangement of the business of others to their own advantage.

This is no imaginary picture : all has been plainly manifested during the reign of confusion and experiments through which we have just passed. The ruin and desolation brought upon the laboring classes of our citizens, in many parts of the country, by the ignorance and recklessness of our rulers at Washington, have, in no small degree, contributed to the adwantage and prosperity of the idle and the profligate. Plans and experiments, devised and concected by knavery and avarice, and carried into effect, ostensibly for the benefit of the people, but which from the beginning was known to be hostile to their interests, have been the sources from which some, of late, have derived essential benefit. For no sooner did they succeed in destroying the currency of the country and deranging its business, than they set about to contrive schemes for turning the disorders to their own private

The Carlisle Merald and Erpositor.

I have been led into these reflections, Mr. Editor, by considering the immense importance, to the working classes of the community, of having men in the legislative and executive departments of the government, who understand, and who are willing to protect, and recommend the interests of the great mass of the people. Men whose connection with the agricultural and manufacturing interests of the country enables them to originate and carry into effect measures protective of the best interests of those, branches of national industry, by which the prosperity of the nation must be sustained. But, as I do not wish at this time to trespass farther on your limits, I shall leave the consideration of this part of the subject to some future occasion, when, I flatter myself, I shall be able to show some good reasons why the Farmers and Mechanics of our State are deeply interested in their choice of men, friendly their interests, as the legislators and rulers of this ndustrious, and, with proper encouragement, great and prosperous COMMONWEALTH.
