The Press of Pennsylvania. but a single paper (and that one edited by an office holder under the Captain.) that supported "Tippecance and Tyler too" in 1840, now pretends to justify John Tyler in his treachery and desertion of those principles which carried him into office ! This speaks well for the Democratic Whig Press of Pennsylvania, and should be viewed by Tyler as a burning rebuke of his madness and folly.

Let the same press remain thus honest and firm, and although there may now be a difference of opinion as to men, the time-will come when all will be again found battling, in union and harmony, for the same great principles now so basely disre- that Cumberland, Franklin and Perry are wedded garded by the political Judas placed by accident into the Presidential Chair.
