-80NG. ...

BY MRS. NORTON. When poor in all but truth and love, I clasped thee to this beating heart, "And vowed for wealth and fame to rove, That we might meet no more to part. Years have gone by—long weary years— Of toil to win the comfort now, Of ardent hopes-of sick ning fears-And Wealth is mine! but where art thou? Fame's duzzling dream for thy dear sake Rose brighter than before to me;

I clung to all I deemed could make This burning heart more worthy thee!. Tears have gone by—the laurel droops In mock'ry o'er my cheerless brow; A conquer'd world before me stoops. And Fame is mine! but where art thou In life's first hours, despised and lone, I wander'd through the busy crowd, But now that life's best hopes are gone, They greet with smiles and murmurs loud.

> To me are vain for where art thou! THOTICOSER ERT

Oh! for thy voice-that happy voice-

To breathe its joyous welcome now!

Wealth, Fame, and all that should rejoice,

THE NUN'S DOOM.

BY H. SYMMES.

Near the town of Aspeitia, in the roman tic land of Spain, stands a large, square, darklooking house, with nothing to relieve the barrenness of the high walls, but a few holes with gratings, and which bear the appearance rather of loopholes than of windows. It is scarce strong enough to be a ed in their pursuit, upon the discovery of prison; nor does it resemble a convent, from Amelia's escape being made known in the the absence of a steeple. The superstructure, which is in reality, however, a number of the town. There is something so gloomy about the tower—something so full of Vague and awful mystery, that I shuddered involuntarily when I beheld it: and when some time afterward, I came to learn one of the deeds which those gloomy walls had witnessed, I was almost tempted to believe in supernatural influences, so vague and chill the superstructure, which is in reality, however, a number of the town. There is something so gloomy about the tower—something so full of Vague and awful mystery, that I shuddered involuntarily when I beheld it: and when some time afterward, I came to learn one of the deeds which those gloomy walls had witnessed, I was almost tempted to believe in supernatural influences, so vague and chill the convent. Before she could collect her thoughts, and awaken from the convent. Before she could collect her thoughts, and awaken from the convent. Before she could collect her thoughts, and awaken from the convent. Before she could collect her thoughts, and awaken from the convent. Before she could collect her thoughts, and awaken from the convent. Before she could collect her thoughts, and awaken from the convent. Before she could collect her thoughts, and awaken from the convent. Before she could collect her thoughts and awaken from the convent. Before she could collect her thoughts, and awaken from the convent. Before she could collect her thoughts and awaken from the convent. Before she could collect her thoughts and awaken from the convent. Before she could collect her thoughts and awaken from the convent. Before she could collect her thoughts and awaken from the convent. Before she could collect her thoughts and awaken from the convent. Before she could collect her thoughts and awaken from the convent. Before she convent. Before the absence of a steeple. The superstruct convent. They still strove to go on, strainsupernatural influences, so vague and chill had been the emotion of horror which I felt on beholding that antique building for the first time. The story was related to meby an old lady, who, in her youth, had been an inmate of this convent for many years. Never shall I forget the tone and gesture with which she spoke as follows:

"There was a lady in our convent, who, during the two years that had clapsed since her arrival, had scarcely exchanged a word with any of the other nuns. She remained constantly secluded in her cell, excepting when summoned by the tolling of the bell to join in the devotions of the community in the choir. She was shunned and avoided by most of the nuns, who generally supposed that some terrible crime, oppressed her conscience; for a calm and gloomy despair sat upon her pale brow, and gave a wild yet melancholy expression to her beautiful and dignified features. Her figure was lofty and noble, but emaciated by suffering. Her prayers and religious duties were repeated and performed with usual fervor. "Often had I remarked, with feelings of commisseration, her wasted form thrown an attitude of humble and carnest sun plication; her pale though beautiful features formed into an expression of the most poignant grief; her eyes raised to Heaven, and dimmed by burning tears. Thus she would long remain, with her arms crossed upon her breast, and motionless as a statue, with the exception of a convulsive quivering of spair, and sob aloud, pronouncing some inarticulate words, as if complaining of her total incapacity to quell the fearful tempest raised within her breast by the conflict of opposed and unconquerable feelings. Again would she strive to raise her heart to God; but in vain. She found no relief in prayer; and, in her utter hopelessness, finding that even "Religion" could not mitigate her torments, she would fall exhausted, and lie extended on the ground, deep sighs rending her bosom, and invoking death to put an end to her miserable and wretched existence.

"Compassionating her sufferings, I essay. ed to offer hel some consolation. She was moved by the sincere expression of my pity, and perceived that I also was unfortunate. "The similarity of our feelings and mis fortunes instinctively drew us toward each other, and I soon gained her friendship, and learnt the cause of her grief. "Her name was Amelia; she was the daughter of the Count of B ...... Her crime had been the forming of a strong at tachment toward a young officer in the army -a man of strict honor and principle, bu whose family and prospects were unfor tunately beneath the notice of the proud Count of B-, who would have though himself disgraced by such an alliance. He forbishis daughter to speak to her lover. or even to think of him; she entreated; he sternly repeated his commands and left her; he was disobeyed; the enraged Count brought her to the convent, and forced her to take the veil, threatening, if she refused, to cause the officer to be assassinated. This had determined her, and she saved her lover's life at the sacrifice of her liberty and her happiness. For two long years she had struggled ineffectually to forget, and to office to the God to whom she had consecrated her existence, a heart pure and free from all worldly affections and regret. But, alas never could she succeed in erasing from her heart the fond memory of her lover; which notwithstanding all her refforts to the contrary, continued to hold entire possession of her soul. His image haunted and pursued her every where. It was in vain for her to seek consolation in prayer; her thoughts would atill wander away from her God, and dwell upon her lover. And this constant conflict between love and religion—the fond recollections of the past lost to her for ever, and the torments to which she imagined herself to be doomed for the future—was the canker which wore and wasted her form, and withered her strength, whilst the burning fever within her breast raged on the formal structure of the structure.

"Months flew, and time but increased her sufferings: all hope had long deserted her. One day, she had remained alone in the choir, after the termination of evening prayers; she was, as usual, imploring for mercy and relief. Her meditation was interrupted by hearing her name pronounced distinctly, though in a whisper. She listened, and heard it again; she started, rose, looked down into the church, and remained thrilled with emotion; supported by a piller, to which she clung, for she recognised by the last gleam of twilight—yes—she could not be mistaken—she recognised her lover. Fearful of detection, he threw a letter into the choir, over the lattice-work, and disappeared. She was weak, enough to read it. It said that by her father's influence, he had been sent on board of a vessel which took him to the Havana, where he was appointed to a regiment. He had petitioned in vain for leave to return to Spain, and evenfor his discharge from the service. Both had been refused. Unable to live without her, he had, at last, sacrificed everything, even his honor to see her again. He had deserted, to find her on his arrival in Spain buried in a convent. He told her that it was impossible that God would accept of vows' which force and fear alone had extort. And Counterfeit Detector. ed from her-they could not be considered as binding. He conjured her, if she still loved him, to fly with him to a foreign land; to repay the sacrifice he had made for her by a similar sacrifice; and then, they would pass the rest of their days in retirement, in peace and happiness. "He promised happiness, when nothing could exceed the wretchedness of her existance-when she felt that even death itself would be unable to crase him from her heart. Was it possible that she could refuse? "I assisted them in their flight, which was effected with the greater facility, as not the slightest suspicion was entertained of such an attempt being in contemplation. The anxiety of avoiding pursuit made them take o the mountains. Being unprovided with Bank of Pennsylvania. a guide they lost their way, and wandered until the horse that bore them, fell exhausted. They proceeded on foot, and having at last met with a shepherd, they persuaded him to guide them. They pursued their weary journey, and after walking all day and night, their eyes were gladdened by the sight of the French frontier. A few minutes more, they would be safe! At this moment, they perceived with horror a de tachment of troops that had been despatch the confusion of what she imagined but a horrid and indistinct dream, she was summoned-before the tribunal, assembled with conformity to the rules of the Order, to try and condemn her on a charge of, sacrilegiously breaking her vows and profanating he sanctity of the convent." Fatigued by the exertion she had underone, my narrator fell back upon her chair, and it was in a voice almost indistinct from ts weakness, that she added, ...

"You guess her doom?" "Perhaps," I suggested, "the poor girl vas confined to a comfortless cell?" A ghastly smile came over the features of the old lady; a smile in which there was something horrible and painful to see. She again sat erect in her chair, placed her head A ghastly smile came over the features of on my shoulder, and approaching her face Farmer's and Mechanic's Bank, to my ear, she said, in a low, hissing whisper, which thrilled me to the heart, and made me shudder, "she was built up in the
