of the responsibility rests upon us. For upwards of ten years Pennsylvania had been gradually improving her condition, and enjoying all the advantages, that can arise from a substantial currency, and the entire confidence of all parts of the world. At an unfortunate period, the banking capital, which had been, during this flourishing season, about twenty millions of dollars, was increased to near sixty; and, as one of the most f tal consequences, many unwise and impolitic public improvements. indertaken,-corporations created for purposes far beyond their means to accomplish, -individuds contracted responsibilities and entered into speculations, which they were totally unable to bring to a successful close; and finally to render the catastrophe more destructive, the explosion of this enormous bank bubble has crushed all these enterprizes, public and private, and left in every quarter of the state some monument of blasted hope and public folly. It will require a little time to recover from the panic, and to estimate, with precision, the extent of the mischief. The revenues upon our public works have not diminished in any proportion to the extent of the embarrassments which have been thrown in the way of trade. -It will be seen by referring to the Report of the Canal Commissioners, which will shortly be laid before you, that notwithstanding the scarcity and depreciation of money, the impaired condition of credit, and the enormous rates of exchanges, the receipts from tolls for the fiscal year, endng the 30th November, 1842,
