MOTHERS AND WIVES.

BY ROBERT MORRIS, ESQ.

We have long been under the impresroom or shine in the gay circle of fashion, male are alluded to with exultation by her mother, as embracing all the elements suited to adorn and beautify the female character. How often, too, do we see parents night goes by, that three or four do not God. call-without paying the slightest attention to the characters of those beaux, their means of livelihood, or their ability to render a gentle being, who has been brought up with great tenderness and care, comfortable and happy. How often do we see these fair young beings permitted to flirt, first with one and then another—to select companions from the reckless and disso-lated.

THE GOLDEN MAXIM OF SIR MATTHEW HALE, A Sabbath well spent Brings a week of content,

Brings a week of content, romantic love-match, the end of which is anguish and despair. How often do we see fathers compelled to take their daughders home again under such eineumstances -while those who went forth from the family fire-side, gloving and blushing with health and hope, and youth and beauty, at HARDWARE AT REDUCED PRICES the end of nive years are the very wreck of what they were but so short a period be-

These mere admirers are, in nine case, out of ten, unsuited to be husbands, and Mikiter round the light of beauty in mers vanity, and with the object of boasting that they visited such and such a one. Sensible men, who are seeking for wives, do not desire to mingle able him to select the prices lower than any other store in Philodelected. with toys and fops in the pursuit, and soon become disgusted with the flippancy and lightness of the coquette, or of the female who is constantly decorating the body, but disregarding the mind. Besides, men of business, merchants, manufacturers, and others, cannot seek, month after month, or year after year, in endeavoring to ascertain the disposition and tone of feeling of the lady they may fancy. If they find her involved in the giddy maze of fashion and folly, they will soon abandon the pursuit, and seek for a more quiet, reasonable and practical object of courtship. There is another error to which we have once or twice adverted, but which cannot be alluded to too often. We refer to the false policy of parents who are in poor or moderate circumstances, in bringing up their and those indebt will make payment to children with expectations of offers in marriage from those far beyond their station, At too often happens that in such cases, the poor girls fade year after year and are compelled in the end, at the decease of those on whom they had heretofore depended for support, to eke out an existence for themselves. How often have we heard young ladies, the daughters of respectable mechanics and store-keepers, sneering at the very possibility of their accepting the proffered hand of any but a merchant or professional character, or some such individual. This is all wrong-radically wrong, and fraught with distress to hundreds and thousands. Far better would it be for any female to marry a reputable, honest and active tradesman, in a thriving business, than a doctor or lawyer with little or no practice. Parents should pay more attention to these things, as well for themselves as for their children. We think it was Major Noah who once said that he lived over again a new life as each of his children grew a pace, and proceeded onward to manhood or womanhood. If this doctrine be true, we should so aducate our offspring as to render them happy, and thus to secure for ourselves the reflected sunshine that brightens their existence.

VERY TRUE. Franklin was an observing and sensible man, and his conclusions seldom incorrect. He said, "A newspaper and Bible in every house, a good school in every direction all studied and pal supports of virtue, morality, and civil other BLANKS.
