Shed streams of gladness on the desert plain; So from my ruder heart flows forth the strain Touched by thy grace; O God? The saddest day has lost its gloom for me, If I may sing at eventide to Thee.

Thou, who the bird hast taught Its time, the brook to gurgle, and the breeze To make sweet music with the forest trees, Within my soul has wrought The charm divine, to cheer me on my way, To that bright world where angels sing for aye.

Mine is no lofty lyre, Nor late volubinous—nor the poets meed of laurel crown—a simple pastor's reed Responds my meek desire To breathe, obscure from men, into thine ear, My God, the strain which they may scorn to hear.

Yet, if its numbers might. n back unto thy fold some wandering sheep, Or bld some pilgrim, and forget to weep, I shall have rich delight, Nor need to envy then the proudest name That stands emblazoned on the roll of fame.

The liquid south stole o'er them, on a bank That leaned to running water. There's to m A daintiness about these carly flowers. That touches me like poetry. They blow With such a simple loveliness, among The common herds of pasture, and breathe Out their lives so unobtrusively, like hearts Whose beatings are too gentle for the world. I love to go in the capitalous days Of April, and hunt violets, when the rain Is in the blue cups trembling, and they nod So gracefully to the kisses of the wind. It may be deemed too litle, but the young Read nature like the manuscript of Heaven, And call the flowers its poetry."
