

HERALD & CECILATOR

CARLISLE, PA.
Wednesday Evening, August 26, 1844.

CIRCULATE THE DOCUMENTS.
NOW IS THE TIME!

True copies of the Herald and Examiner, will be sent to our Post Office and to one address, from this time until the Presidential Election for ONE DOLLAR, or sixteen copies for FIVE DOLLARS. The Friends of CLAY, FRELINGHUYSEN and MARKLE, may easily do so, and the people in Carlisle, whether on a military, political or personal occasion, but it was as Captain Sanderson says, a "failure". The Captain does however admit that it was a "grand failure". We thank him for that much, if it was a failure, it certainly must be admitted that Whig failure beat the world!

Mr. Morton's Speech.—
We commend the writer of the M. Morton to the attention of our readers. It will give them a full insight into the baseness of the previous scheme, for the annexation of Texas.

Meeting at Mechanicsburg.—
We learn that it has been deemed advisable to postpone the Whig meeting at Mechanicsburg from the 7th to the 21st of September, when the Whig clan will again rally in their strength and power to keep the ball rolling on!

Meeting at Churchtown.—
The Whigs of Monoc township will hold a general meeting in Churchtown on Saturday, to which they tender a cordial invitation to their friends in the surrounding townships. Our friends there are pushing the good cause forward in the liveliest manner, and will give a report for Clay, Frelighuyse and Markle at the polls that will astound some folks!

Whig Mass Meetings.—
A great rally of the "Old Guard" of Lancaster county will take place in Lancaster on the 5th of September, at which the Whigs of neighbouring counties are invited. Hon. John M. Clayton will certainly be present and probably Daniel Webster.

Our gallant neighbors of Adams who have nobly earned the title of the "Young Guard," will hold a grand Mass Meeting on Friday the 20th of September, to which their brethren of Cumberland are particularly invited.

The Whigs of Dauphin county have called a Mass Meeting to be held in Harrisburg on Tuesday the 17th day of September, upon which occasion the Whigs of Cumberland will have an opportunity to reciprocate past favors.

A mass Clay and Markle meeting will also be held in Perry county, near Clark's Ferry on the 19th of September.

Keep up the Fire!—
We notice in the last Works and Schuykill Journal, a letter from Ex. Gov. Rinor in which he expresses himself in decided terms for Clay. After speaking in pretty sharp terms of the loco-foco heresies, and the question at issue, the Governor concludes—"I therefore go for Gen. MARKLE, first, and then I go for CLAY and FRELINGHUYSEN."

The Editor of the Herald makes some pretensions to decency and religion, and would fain have it believed in the community that he is the very personification of veracity and fair dealing; we venture the assertion that there are no more base and unprincipled and wicked misrepresentations published in his paper from week to week than can be found in the most venomous sheet published under the auspices of that foul party.

We were not present at the meeting in Newville, but understand that it was one of the best of all the enthusiastic demonstrations the Whigs had had this season. The number of attendance was estimated at fully EIGHT HUNDRED, and the best spirit prevailed throughout the proceedings. Some two hundred of the royal girls of eighteen forty" graced the meeting with their presence and influence. Gov. RITTNER presided, and made a few pertinent remarks upon taking the chair. Addresses were then delivered on the several subjects forming the politics of the day by Hon. Alexander Ramsey, of Harrisburg, in the German language, and J. E. Brady, Esq. of Chambersburg, and S. Dunlap Adair, Esq. of Carlisle. The speeches were able and elicited the enthusiastic applause of the crowd.

The good cause bravely on Old Mother Cumberland! Every day makes our prospects clearer for a signal triumph when the people's voice is heard at the polls!

Carlisle—Clay Club.—
A large meeting of the East Pennsylvania Clay Club was held on the 10th inst., at the House of John Sourbeck, in Bridgeport, for the purpose of adopting the Constitution and selecting Officers for its permanent organization. Whereupon the report of the Committee nominating the following officers was adopted:

President—Mr. SIMON OYSTER.

Vice-Presidents—John Soubeck, George Criswell, William F. Martin, John P. Hummel.

Corresponding Secretary—Joseph O. Banks, Rec. Soc.—Thomas Flowers, Samuel Ouborn, Treasurer—Daniel Erie.

Executive Committee—John Sherburn, John Holz, John Denning, Daniel Moltz and Samuel Saddington.

Springfield Clay Club.—
The friends of Clay and Markle in Springfield have followed in the good work and formed a Clay Club for that part of West Pennsylvanian territory. The following are the officers:

President—Dr. G. G. GROVER, Vice-President—John Franklin, David B. Biddle, Dr. Wm. McCombs, Robert M. Haye.

Recording Secretary—John V. Palmer, Cor. Sec.—Rec. Com. Samuel Palmer, George Harlan, and James P. Doty.

Its Policy—Withdrawal!

On John Tyler has in a public address to his friends withdrawn his name from the Presidential contest. The Moralists of the country, for Polk and Dallas, are solicited to pursue this matter with the same energy and interest, and will ensure the success of the Whigs.

A Challenge.—
The Statesman challenges the Whig party to a public discussion of several propositions connected with the tariff and distribution measures, the last having important questions now before the people. The Whigs are not the boys to back out from this challenge, and we will ensure the acceptance of the challenge in the time, place and manner proposed.

Another Sign.—
A special election for Governor of Pennsylvania will be held on Saturday the 20th of October, to receive from all the counties the returns of the election for Governor of Pennsylvania, to be held on Saturday the 13th of October.

The letter of Dr. Bacon in regard to the charges against Henry Clay, will be found on the opposite page. After this, the Whigs received testimony of fact that the Whigs in the two hope to be elected, and will be elected, and again furnish the strongest argument in favor of the Whig party.

The Whig is the brightest and most brilliant of the Whig party, and it is estimated that the Whig party will be elected.

The Whig is the most comprehensive and the most logical of the Whig party, and it is estimated that the Whig party will be elected.

The Whig is the most logical and the most

Our Grand Failure!

It is evident that the Whigs have not held a brighter meeting in this country, and this is what was, next, a grand failure! Some good Whigs thought the earthquake burst on the 17th, would have stamped the Captain, and stopped the majority of failure. We know they would be mistaken, and therefore were not surprised on opening the last Volunteer to find an account of the meeting headed in large letters "Grand Failure!"

There was nothing surprising or laughable about the Captain's failure, for it was as Captain Sanderson says, a "failure". The Captain does however admit that it was a "grand failure". We thank him for that much, if it was a failure, it certainly must be admitted that Whig failure beat the world!

But it certainly was a failure, for the same individual, who could see after hundreds of persons in the little school gathered at the loco-foco mass meeting on Monday two weeks, could only see nine hundred, or at most twenty-five hundred, in the Whig meeting! What admirable things are types and in Edin, with any conceivable turn of events, the Whigs meeting in a cooled hall!

Nothing is easier for an old veteran in the business, like our friend the Captain. The Whig meeting was a failure—Captain Sanderson has said so, and the testimony of even eight or ten thousand persons to the contrary, could not invalidate his assertion!

But more as the Whig meeting was something about it nevertheless undoubtedly secured our neighbor a good deal, according to his own admission.

We really thought the Captain had more nerve than to imagine those beautiful green roofs, which were erected at various points to "be gallows." You should not have permitted these trifling decorations to have so disturbed you, though—the Whig has a greater mind and of an extensive acquaintance with itself and thence, his opinion, in most pertaining to the interior of the Society, was duly appreciated, and ought to be highly regarded.

The house, which at one time characterized the Captain, led him to conclude that his brethren, in order to devise ways and means to relieve the distressed, comfort the afflicted and rescue the abandoned from a course of ruin and folly.

As a neighbor he was kind and obliging, and a man of infinite information—a father and independent and faithful son of his nation, his principles well known in the church, which was his peculiar study, and his character and worth could not be learned by the public generally.

Possessed of a strong mind and of an extensive acquaintance with itself and thence, his opinion, in most pertaining to the interior of the Society, was duly appreciated, and ought to be highly regarded.

The house, which at one time characterized the Captain, led him to conclude that his brethren, in order to devise ways and means to relieve the distressed, comfort the afflicted and rescue the abandoned from a course of ruin and folly.

As a neighbor he was kind and obliging,

and a man of infinite information—a father and

independent and faithful son of his nation,

his principles well known in the church, which was his peculiar study, and his character and worth could not be learned by the public generally.

Possessed of a strong mind and of an extensive acquaintance with itself and thence, his opinion, in most pertaining to the interior of the Society, was duly appreciated, and ought to be highly regarded.

The house, which at one time characterized the Captain, led him to conclude that his brethren, in order to devise ways and means to relieve the distressed, comfort the afflicted and rescue the abandoned from a course of ruin and folly.

As a neighbor he was kind and obliging,

and a man of infinite information—a father and

independent and faithful son of his nation,

his principles well known in the church, which was his peculiar study, and his character and worth could not be learned by the public generally.

Possessed of a strong mind and of an extensive acquaintance with itself and thence, his opinion, in most pertaining to the interior of the Society, was duly appreciated, and ought to be highly regarded.

The house, which at one time characterized the Captain, led him to conclude that his brethren, in order to devise ways and means to relieve the distressed, comfort the afflicted and rescue the abandoned from a course of ruin and folly.

As a neighbor he was kind and obliging,

and a man of infinite information—a father and

independent and faithful son of his nation,

his principles well known in the church, which was his peculiar study, and his character and worth could not be learned by the public generally.

Possessed of a strong mind and of an extensive acquaintance with itself and thence, his opinion, in most pertaining to the interior of the Society, was duly appreciated, and ought to be highly regarded.

The house, which at one time characterized the Captain, led him to conclude that his brethren, in order to devise ways and means to relieve the distressed, comfort the afflicted and rescue the abandoned from a course of ruin and folly.

As a neighbor he was kind and obliging,

and a man of infinite information—a father and

independent and faithful son of his nation,

his principles well known in the church, which was his peculiar study, and his character and worth could not be learned by the public generally.

Possessed of a strong mind and of an extensive acquaintance with itself and thence, his opinion, in most pertaining to the interior of the Society, was duly appreciated, and ought to be highly regarded.

The house, which at one time characterized the Captain, led him to conclude that his brethren, in order to devise ways and means to relieve the distressed, comfort the afflicted and rescue the abandoned from a course of ruin and folly.

As a neighbor he was kind and obliging,

and a man of infinite information—a father and

independent and faithful son of his nation,

his principles well known in the church, which was his peculiar study, and his character and worth could not be learned by the public generally.

Possessed of a strong mind and of an extensive acquaintance with itself and thence, his opinion, in most pertaining to the interior of the Society, was duly appreciated, and ought to be highly regarded.

The house, which at one time characterized the Captain, led him to conclude that his brethren, in order to devise ways and means to relieve the distressed, comfort the afflicted and rescue the abandoned from a course of ruin and folly.

As a neighbor he was kind and obliging,

and a man of infinite information—a father and

independent and faithful son of his nation,

his principles well known in the church, which was his peculiar study, and his character and worth could not be learned by the public generally.

Possessed of a strong mind and of an extensive acquaintance with itself and thence, his opinion, in most pertaining to the interior of the Society, was duly appreciated, and ought to be highly regarded.

The house, which at one time characterized the Captain, led him to conclude that his brethren, in order to devise ways and means to relieve the distressed, comfort the afflicted and rescue the abandoned from a course of ruin and folly.

As a neighbor he was kind and obliging,

and a man of infinite information—a father and

independent and faithful son of his nation,

his principles well known in the church, which was his peculiar study, and his character and worth could not be learned by the public generally.

Possessed of a strong mind and of an extensive acquaintance with itself and thence, his opinion, in most pertaining to the interior of the Society, was duly appreciated, and ought to be highly regarded.

The house, which at one time characterized the Captain, led him to conclude that his brethren, in order to devise ways and means to relieve the distressed, comfort the afflicted and rescue the abandoned from a course of ruin and folly.

As a neighbor he was kind and obliging,

and a man of infinite information—a father and

independent and faithful son of his nation,

his principles well known in the church, which was his peculiar study, and his character and worth could not be learned by the public generally.

Possessed of a strong mind and of an extensive acquaintance with itself and thence, his opinion, in most pertaining to the interior of the Society, was duly appreciated, and ought to be highly regarded.

The house, which at one time characterized the Captain, led him to conclude that his brethren, in order to devise ways and means to relieve the distressed, comfort the afflicted and rescue the abandoned from a course of ruin and folly.

As a neighbor he was kind and obliging,

and a man of infinite information—a father and

independent and faithful son of his nation,

his principles well known in the church, which was his peculiar study, and his character and worth could not be learned by the public generally.

Possessed of a strong mind and of an extensive acquaintance with itself and thence, his opinion, in most pertaining to the interior of the Society, was duly appreciated, and ought to be highly regarded.

The house, which at one time characterized the Captain, led him to conclude that his brethren, in order to devise ways and means to relieve the distressed, comfort the afflicted and rescue the abandoned from a course of ruin and folly.

As a neighbor he was kind and obliging,

and a man of infinite information—a father and

independent and faithful son of his nation,

his principles well known in the church, which was his peculiar study, and his character and worth could not be learned by the public generally.

Possessed of a strong mind and of an extensive acquaintance with itself and thence, his opinion, in most pertaining to the interior of the Society, was duly appreciated, and ought to be highly regarded.

The house, which at one time characterized the Captain, led him to conclude that his brethren, in order to devise ways and means to relieve the distressed, comfort the afflicted and rescue the abandoned from a course of ruin and folly.

As a neighbor he was kind and obliging,

and a man of infinite information—a father and

independent and faithful son of his nation,

his principles well known in the church, which was his peculiar study, and his character and worth could not be learned by the public generally.

Possessed of a strong mind and of an extensive acquaintance with itself and thence, his opinion, in most pertaining to the interior of the Society, was duly appreciated, and ought to be highly regarded.

The house, which at one time characterized the Captain, led him to conclude that his brethren, in order to devise ways and means to relieve the distressed, comfort the afflicted and rescue the abandoned from a course of ruin and folly.

As a neighbor he was kind and obliging,

and a man of infinite information—a father and

independent and faithful son of his nation,

his principles well known in the church, which was his peculiar study, and his character and worth could not be learned by the public generally.

Possessed of a strong mind and of an extensive acquaintance with itself and thence, his opinion, in most pertaining to the interior of the Society, was duly appreciated, and ought to be highly regarded.

The house, which at one time characterized the Captain, led him to conclude that his brethren, in order to devise ways and means to relieve the distressed, comfort the afflicted and rescue the abandoned from a course of ruin and folly.

As a neighbor he was kind and obliging,

and a man of infinite information—a father and

independent and faithful son of his nation,

his principles well known in the church, which was his peculiar study, and his character and worth could not be learned by the public generally.