Then, strange to think, when we are gone, That still will rise and set the sun; The day will dewn as fair, as bright ; The stars will glow as rich at night; The world move onward as before; The winds will blow, the ocean roar; The forest murmur in the breeze. And verdure clothe and leave the trees; .The buds will swell and blossoms blow, And changing seasons comegand go; Though all to us will be forgot, -And we shall sleep and heed it not.

And other forms will walk the earth, With other scenes of joy and mirth ; And other friendships will be form'd, And other hearts with love be warm'd; And smiles will please and tears will flow, And sighs will heave the breast of snow; And poets sing and lovers sigh, And more be born; like us to die; Though this to us will be but naught-We all shall sleep and heed it not!

Though the green mound upon our breast, Or sulptured stone, should mark our rest. Yet soon that stone will full away, And earth be levelled where we lay ; The clod by ploughshares will be cleft. And no sad traces will be left; And strangers' feet will trend the spot, And pass our rest and know it not. Or o'er our dust may cities rise, And point their turrets to the skies; Ambition, wealth, and power and pride, May spure the earth in which we hide-Or saints may kneel, or buffoons play Where, lost, our names and ashes lay; Still we shall sleep, and heed it not.

But stranger still, (should we pursue A future thought, that may be true,) -Not-only-men; like leaves, may fall; But the whole nation sink, and all-Be lost,-extinct this race of man; Like Palenque, or like Copan; And overall this broad of ... A wilderness may rise again:

Learn sea to pea Opon const to coast ? Her forests of a thousand years, Where savage men may find a home, And kindred beasts may howl and roam. Yet all to us will be forgot, Calmly we'll sleep and heed it not.

THE TIME TO DIE.

It was winter. Before a cheerful fire sat an aged man in lonely meditation. The curtains fell in heavy folds to the floor, casting an air of comfort over the room, and excluding the piercing cold. Yet a ear. 'I am thankful that I have a shelter on such a night as this,' said he, drawing his easy chair nearer to the fire: ' Woe to the wretch that roams abroad in such a pausing in deep thought, which at length Channing. found expression; Death is a fearful thing to contemplate at any time, but in struggle hard for life. To be placed deep in the cold and frozen earth, no! she herself seems to strive to prevent the act, and Manners are what vex or soothe, corrupt winds her robe-of snow-over her strong or purify, exalt or debase, barbarize or rebreast to prevent admittance into her bosom. When I die, may it be in the bright and joyous spring time, when all nature is fresh and gay. But, hark! surely I did not hear a knock, for who would venture out on such a hight?' and opening the door he saw before him a young girl, who begged for shelter in accents to excite pily in the hardest heart. The appeal was enough for the kind-hearted old man, and drawing her within the room, he gave her a seat near the fire, and tried to revive her drooping frame. After she had so far recovered as to answer his inquiries, she told him that she was a lonely creature ular family medicine Dr. Swayne's Compound

Winter again returned; again we see the old man sitting in his easy chair before the bright and glowing fire; but he is not the solitary being he was before, for beside him is one in the first blush of youth and grace; she is no longer the gay and thoughtless child; she is no less lovely, no less happy; but a deeper thought steals over her face, and a heavenly radiance sits upon her features, as she bends over the bookfrom which, in accents of deep reverence, she reads the word of God to the old man. What think they now of death? The aces of both look more restrained, the Holy Spirit sheds its light upon the way which leadeth to the grave; it no longer seems dark and lonely. The old man received the heavenly guest into a heart which had always been the residence of kindness and charity. The maiden now drooped daily, but she no longer thought it hard to give up life; and when the cold-blast swept over the earth, and the robe of snow enreloped it, with robes no less white she was received into its bosom. Then I asked the old man, twhen is the time to die?'.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION .- We are hoping to renew men and women by literature and science; but all in vain. We shall learn in time that moral and religious culture is the only foundation forreforming human nature by the means relied on for its growth, and that the poor who receive a care which awakens their conscience and moral sentiments, start under happier auspices than the prosperous, who place supreme dependence-on the education of the intellect and taste. It is the kind, not the tremor passed over the frame of the old extent of knowledge, by which the advaceman, as the storm without fell upon his ment of a human being must be measured, and that kind which alone exalts a man is placed within the reach of all. Moral and Religious Truth-this is the treasure of the intellect, and all are poor without it .storm: then musing for some time, he This transcends physical truth s far as the began pacing the room, and ever and anon Heaven is lifted above the Earth .- Dr.

Manners.-Manners are of more impor such a season as this, methinks I would tance than laws. Upon them in a great measure the laws depend. The law touch es us but here and there now and then .fine us, by a constant, steady, uniform, insensible operation, like that of the air we breath in. They give their whole form and color to our lives. According to their quality, they aid morals, they supply them, or they totally destroy them .- Burke.
