W. T. SANDERS

Dec. 20, 1843.

POPULAR LECTURES,

On Various Subjects in the Physical Science, delivered in the chief cities and Towns in the United States,

By DIONYSIUS LARDNER,

Doctor of Civil Law, Fellow of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburg, Member of the Universities of Cambridge and Dublin, and formerly Professor of Natural Philosophy and Astronomy in the University of London, &c., &c.

THE Publishers announce that DR. LARDNER having closed his professional tour as a public lecturer in this country, they have availed themselves of the opportunity of inducing him to prepare for publication a complete and authentic edition of his popular Lectures on Science. The general interest which these discourses have excited for the last four years throughout the Union, manifested by the continued assemblage of audiences of unprecedented numbers and respectability, in every part of the country, from Boston to New Orleans, and from New York to St. Louis, afford the publishers good grounds for the assurance that they will thus present to the American Public an acceptable offering and a most useful manual of general information. They will also afford that large class of persons who have attended these courses an agreeable means of reviewing the impressions from which they have derived already so much pleasure and profit.

The following is a list of subjects which will be embraced in these Lectures:

The Solar System; The Theory of Gravitation; The Moon, (two lectures;) The Sun; The Planets; The Plurality of Worlds; The Comets, (two lectures;) The Existence and Attributes of God Deduced from the Laws of Nature; Popular Fallacies: Light; Sound; Heat; Electricity; (two lectures;) The Power of Steam; The Steam Engine; The Present State and Prospects of Steam Navigation in the United States and Great Britain; Railways; Galvanism, (two lectures;) The Stellar Universe, Combustion and Artificial Illumination; The Atmosphere, &c., &c., &c.; Magnetic Telegraphs; The Alliance of Science and Art, &c., &c., &c.

No expense will be spared to render this work useful and attractive. Wood engravings illustrating the text will be copiously supplied. The work will be printed on new type, in the octavo form, and will be published in parts or numbers, at twenty-five cents each, and will be completed in about ten or twelve numbers. The first number will appear about the 1st of May next. Agents GREELY & McELRATH.

USEFUL WORKS FOR THE PEOPLE.

THE Publishers having lost their entire stock—Books, Plates and Engravings—of their Series of "Useful Books for the People," by a late calamitous fire, have commenced the publication of a new Series, the first in order of which is the work on Astronomy, by ARAGO and LARDNER. Probably no work has ever appeared on the sublime science of astronomy, combining the same amount of accurate scientific information, with as much that is pleasing and entertaining to all classes of readers.

It is designed to follow up this publication by others of a like useful and interesting character, and although each one in this new series will be complete in itself, and entirely independent of each other; yet they will all be printed in the same size page, in order that the series may be bound together. The uniform price of each will be 25 cents.

Mrs. Caudle's Curtain Lectures.

Mrs. Caudle has been to see her dear Mother. Caudle, on the joyful occasion, has given a party, and issued the annexed card of invitation.

When the cat's away
The mice will play.

Mr. Candle's complements to Mr. Pretty-man and expects to have the honor of his company on this joyful occasion, at half-past eight o'clock.

"It is hard, I think, Mr. Caudle, that I can't leave home for a day or two, but the house must be turned into a tavern, a tavern!—a pothouse! Yes, I thought you were very anxious that I should go; I thought you wanted to get rid of me for something, or you would not have insisted on my staying at dear mother's all night. You were afraid I should get cold coming home, were you? Oh yes, you can be very tender, you can, Mr. Caudle, when it suits your purpose! Yes! and the world thinks what a good husband you are! I only wish the world knew you as well as I do, that's all; but it shall, some day, I'm determined.

"I'm sure the house will not be sweet for a month. All the curtains are poisoned with smoke, and the carpets are all filthy with grease and tobacco-ashes. Then the Aaron Hall [illegible] you to say, take 'em down; but they were only cleaned and put up a month ago; but a careful wife is lost upon you, Mr. Caudle. You ought to have married somebody who'd have let your house go to wreck and ruin, as I will for the future. People who don't care for their families are better thought of than those who do; I've found out that.

"And what a condition the carpet's in! They've taken five pounds of it, if a farthing, with their filthy boots, and I don't know what besides. And then the smoke in the hearth-rug, and a large cinder hole burnt in it. I never saw such a house in my life! If you wanted to have a few friends, why couldn't you invite them when your wife's at home, like any other men! not have 'em sneaking in, like a set of house-breakers, directly a woman turns her back. They must be pretty gentlemen they must; mean fellows, that are afraid to face a women! Ha! and you call yourselves the lords of creation! I should like to know what would become of creation if you were left to yourselves! A pretty pickle creation would be in very soon!

"You must all have been in a nice condition! What do you say? You took nothing? Took nothing, didn't you? I'm sure there's a regiment of empty bottles, I have! the heart to count 'em. And punch, too! you must have punch! There a hundred half lemons in the kitchen, if there's one; for Susan, like a good girl, kept 'em to show 'em to me. No, sirs Susan shan't leave the house. What do you say? She has no right to tell tales, and you will be master of your own house! Will you? If you don't alter, Mr. Caudle, you'll soon have no house to be master of. A whole loaf sugar did I leave in the cupboard, and there isn't as much as would fill a tea-cup. Do you suppose I'm to find sugar for punch for fifty men? What do you say? There wasn't fifty? That's no matter; the more shame for 'em, sir. I'm sure that they drank enough for fifty. Do you suppose I'm to find sugar for punch for all the world out of my housekeeping money? You don't ask me? Don't you ask me? You do; you know you do, for if I only wasn't a shilling extra the house is in a blaze. And yet a whole loaf sugar you throw away upon——No! I won't be still; and I won't let you go to sleep. If you had got to bed at a proper hour last night you wouldn't have been so sleepy now. You can sit up half the night with a pack of people who don't care for you, and your poor wife can't get in a word.

"And there's that Chloe Smoze that I had when I was married—I wouldn't have taken any sum for it, and you know it—and how do I find it? With the preshus head knocked off it. And what was more mean, more contemptible, than all besides, it was put on again as if nothing had happened. You knew nothing about it! Now, how can you lie there, in your Christian bed, Caudle, and say that? You know that following Pretty man, bkoke off the head with the poker. You know that he did! And you hadn't the feeling to protect what you knew was precious to me. Oh no, if the truth was known, you were very glad to see it broken for that very reason.

"Every way, I've been insulted. I should like to know who it was who corked whiskers on my dear aunt's picture.—Oh, you are laughing, are you? Your'e not laughing? Don't tell me that. I should like to know what shakes the bed, then, if your'e not laughing? Yes, corked whiskers on her dear face—and she was a good soul to you Caudle, and you ought to be ashamed of yourself to see her ill-used. Oh, you may laugh! Its very easy to laugh! I only wish you had a little feeling, like other people, that's all.

"Then there's my china mug—the ugm I had before I was married—when I was a happy creature. I should like to know who broke the spout off that mug? Don't tell me it was cracked before—it's no such thing, Caudle; there wasn't a flaw in it—and now, I could have cried when I saw it. Don't tell me it wasn't worth twopence. How do you know? You never buy mugs. But that's like men; they think nothing in a house costs anything.

"There's four glasses broke, and nine cracked. At least, that's all I've found out at present; but I dare say I shall discover a dozen to-morrow.

"And I should like to know where the cotton umbrella's gone to—and I should to know who broke the bell-pull—and perhaps you don't know there's a leg off a chair—and perhaps—"

"Here," says Caudle, "Morpheus come to my aid, and I slept; nay, I think that I snored."

AARON BURR.

Mr. Wallace gives, in the last number of the New World, a seathing annalysis of the character of Aaron Burr. It cannot but be instructive to contemplate upon the bad eminance which this man obtained by the brilliancy of his intellect, and the depth of infamy to which he sunk by the indulgence of his passions. We make an extract:

"He cherished no friendship—he returned [illegible] and left little regret behind him. He died by the very fireside of hospitality the flame of lust, and felt little pleasure in bidding adieu to the Lares of his host, until the dearest that flourished in their sacred shadows were sacrificed. The man's whole being centred on the pivot of selfishness. But for the affection which he manifested towards his daughter, his sole moral merits seem to have been courage and coolness; and yet, clustering as were the laurels which they wedded to his brow—his base passions so predominated, that he held it more glorious to seduce a womant than to glitter in the field of letters, to scale the steeps of Philosophy, or wave a banner victoriously in battle.

He courted the man to corrupt his wife—the statesman to profit by his influence; the millionaire to obtain his money—and the world to gratify his desires. He was the more dangerous from the possession of an intellect massive, piercing and brilliant, united to a frame at once handsome and vigorous. His mind was but the keen and resistless weapon with which his passions hewed a way to conquest. That weapon was Protean. But few could escape its ever changing attack. If the victim fully came under the gaze of an eye—whose sharp light resembling lightning imprisoned and forever playing in a cloud black as night—he was lost. Burr's conversation was irresistibly fascinating—for his hand swept every chord of human harp.

Age is expected to subdue; but with Burr, the winter of Time brought no snows to cool the lava of passion. At four score and six, the crater wore a glow as ardent as at twenty. His faculties mocked at a century. * * * * * * *

In cunning an Iago, in lust a Tarquin, in patience a Cataline, in pleasure a Sybarite, in gratitude a Malay, and in ambition a Napoleon, he affords the world an awful example of powerful intellect destitute of virtue. His portrait would fitly appear in a circle of Dante's Inferno.

*He seduced the wife and daughter of the man who gave him shelter after the duel with Hamilton. †In his own assertion.

GRANDEUR OF THE MISSIONARY ENTERPRISE.—"Christianity herself moves in advance of her own civilization, and does not wait the tardy operation of philosophical causes. Concious of the power over universal man, and that she holds the world's destiny in her hands, she has undertaken, as a specific object, and as her own proper work, the reclamation—not of provinces, or of continents, but of nations;—all the millions of humanity. Possessed by this august idea—an idea infinitely surpassing in the grandeur of its conception every project of ambition, every dream of universal empire—she has surveyed the entire prize from all its points.

"She has marked out with astonishing boldness and precision her plane of operation, and moves to the execution with a steady and fixed eye; with boundless energy, and inexlingishable faith. Already she is in occupation of the seats of power in every division of the globe, and speaks to its multitudes in two hundred languages."

SHOEMAKING.—Professor Ingraham thus graphically describes the town of Lynn, Massachusetts, the shoemakers, and the vast cordwainery of the whole Union:

The very pleasant and thriving town of Lynn, is the Paradise of shoemakers.

Its young men, early transferred from the cradle to the last, cut their teeth and leather at the same time, and its pretty maidens learn to bind shoes with the induction of their a, b, abs. Lovers exchange hearts over a kind slipper, and swear eternal fidelity over a lap stone. If they would get married, they ask old Dr. Waxend, the parson, if he will stitch them together, and they will pay him in hides and shoemending. Whipping their children is called tanning, and the rod they use is a cow-hide. The little boys swear by 'hides and leather,' and play at games which they call 'high and low quarter and toe.' A child newly born is a lap stone, and the ages of their children are known by the number of shoes they wear. Boys are called rights and girls lefts—an old maid is an old slipper, and a bachelor an old boot. The street doors of their dwellings are 'insteps,' and a man in an overcoat is 'foxed.' The fields about town are patches, and a fellow half seas over is half soled. They never see an oak tree but they directly calculate the number of pegs it will make, and when they see bees at work they reflect that the only end of wax is waxed end. They look upon cattle and sheep as leather growing, and believe hogs were only made to produce bristles. Its lap stones would pave Broadway, and lasts, if piled together would make a monument higher than that on Bunker's Hill.

TRUE BENEVOLENCE.—Genuine philanthrophy, embracing man in all his relations, throughout the unlimited duration of existance, is a much more noble principle, than even the more exalted patriotism. It over looks minor distinctions, and contemplates the human race in the relation of brotherhood; children of the same common parent endowed with similar capacities, and subject to similar disappointments, miseries, and death. It prompts to comprehensive plans and vigorous self denying efforts to secure the highest happiness of all. If we trace the history of benevolence, we find the most prominent characters that figure there, distinguished above other, not so much by superiority of intellect as by greatness of soul. For though HOWARD, WILBERFORCE, WASHINGTON, were not inferior in native powers of mind, yet it was peculiary their enlightened, enlarged, persevering benevolence; their high regard for the rights and happiness of man, which made them truly great, and which has embalmed their memories in the hearts of every nation.

And when it is considered, that Aaron Burr, or even Benedict Arnold, had intellect, which if expanded by the same benevolence, might have shone upon the nation and world, with a splendor, equal perhaps to that of the wisest and the best; it is truly mourned to think of to themselves and to mankind! Ah,

"Many a name,
Which might have blazed on history's page,
To light this darksome, luring age,
Is now forgotten and unknown."

Or "damned to everlasting fame."

Let the youth, then, who would not live and die "unblessing and unblest," but secure enduring honor, such as God approves, let him not think to gain to object, merely by native energy, or hard study, of external advantages, or intellectual superiority; but, renouncing selfishness, let him cultivate, in every movement genuine benevolence. And this of itself, while it diffuses happiness, and perhaps elevates many, cannot fail to quicken, invigorate and expand every faculty of his soul.

At the same time, let such as have the training of youthful mind, ever remember, that without the moral image of God, the mightiest human intellect will be nought but mightiest rebellion, remorse, and endless shame.

Machine Poetry.

The loud wind roared, the thunder rolled,
Fierce lightning split the sky,
And all the west seemed tinged with gold
As I was reaping rye.

I laid my sickle down to view
The grand and awful work,
But didn't stay to see it through—
Or no—I warn't a Turk.

SMALL POTATOE REPARTEE.—An old bachelor having been laughed at by a party of pretty girls, told them they were small potatoes. "We may be small potatoes," replied one of them, "but we are sweet ones."

FOR-GETTING ME.—John, I fear you are forgetting me. Will a bright eye and gift to her Sweetheart, the other day.

Yes, Sues, I have been forgetting you these two years.
