Amongst the recent appointments in the Philadelphia Custom House are a large number of the Locofoco editors of the State. Six were put into "comfortable berths" at one time.

We hope the Whigs will profit by the example of the Locofocos, and if they can place their editors into public offices, will see the necessity, as well as the propriety, of assisting them by their own voluntary support, promptly rendered.

Character of Gen. Jackson.

The editor of the Philadelphia North American accompanies the announcement of the death of Gen. Jackson, with the following analysis of his political and personal character. It strikes us as truthful and just—nothing extenuating nor nothing gowned in malice.

As a military leader his courage and sagacity have never been questioned. He may have been impetuous, but he backed up his impetuosity with all the powers which he possessed.

As a statesman he was patriotic in his purposes and extremely arbitrary in enforcing them. His opinions were rather the result of impulses than a calm comprehensive survey of facts.

As a citizen he was beloved and respected. He was as sincere in his friendships as he was undiguised in his hostilities.

Meeting in Carlisle, on the Death of Gen. Andrew Jackson.

Feeling it to be a beautiful feature in the character of an independent people, and a strong evidence of the love of that virtue and heroism, which form the basis of the civil and religious liberties of our country, and the surest defence of our Republican Institutions, we, as citizens in an appropriate manner, the death of our great man; and those who have regarded with vigilance, the blessings which accrued to our happiness as a people, and give us an exalted character in the eyes of other nations;—a large number of our citizens met (without distinction of party) in "Education Hall," on Thursday evening last, to take such measures as should become them, in expressing their regret for the death, and their respect for the character and services of Gen. Resolved, That we deeply deplore the loss which the country sustains in the death of Gen. Jackson. Resolved, That although he has fallen, and in him "a great man has fallen in Israel," he left a ripe with years, and full of honors, and he died a bright example of manly virtue, and patriotic devotion to his country, for the benefit of posterity in all time to come.

Resolved, That in pointing to the names of the sainted Fathers of the Republic, our Washington and Adams, and Jefferson and Madison, we can add another not less brilliant, to the list of departed spirits, whose love for his fellow men, and zeal in the advocacy of public rights, and heroism in their defence on the field of battle, were not surpassed in the annals of American history.
