

Carlisle Herald and Expositor.

A FAMILY NEWSPAPER—DEVOTED TO GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, ADVERTISING, POLITICS, LITERATURE, MORALITY, AGRICULTURE, ARTS AND SCIENCES, AMUSEMENT, &c.

VOLUME XLV. CARLISLE, PA. NOVEMBER 13, 1845. NUMBER 133.

HERALD & EXPOSTOR

Office, Centre Square, S. W. Corner, at the Old Stand.

TERMS OF PUBLICATION

ADVERTISING: A single insertion, payable in advance, is published for one dollar per annum, payable in three months. For longer periods, the price will be made on application. Advertising will be done on the usual terms. Letters of insertion must be paid for.

GALVIN BLYTHE

Attorney at Law. Will practice in the several Courts of the City and County of Philadelphia. His office is at No. 35 South Fourth Street, between Chestnut and Walnut Streets, Philadelphia, Sept. 24, 1845.

C. B. PENROSE

Late Solicitor of the Treasury of the United States. Will practice Law in the several Courts of Lancaster, Berks, Lehigh, and Northampton Counties. Office at South Second Street, lately occupied by John R. Montgomery, Esq. June 18, 1845.

S. DUNLAP ADAIR

Attorney at Law. Office in South Lancaster Street, a few doors below J. S. Graham, Esq. July 16, 1845.

WILLIAM H. MILLER

Attorney at Law. Office removed to Heister's Row in the corner of the old South Lancaster Street, Carlisle, April 5, 1844.

COLWELL & M'CLURE

Attorneys at Law. Will attend promptly to business entrusted to them in the counties of Cumberland and Franklin. Office corner west of the Jail and High Street, Carlisle, and next door to Stumbaugh & Hoover's Drug Store, Shippenburg. April 24, 1844.

DR. J. C. COONS

DENTIST. Will perform all operations upon the Teeth that are required for their preservation, such as Scaling, Filing, Plugging, &c., or will restore the loss of them, or insert Artificial Teeth, from a single Tooth, to a full set. Office on Pitt Street, a few doors South of the Railroad Hotel. Dr. J. C. Coons will be absent from Carlisle the last two days in each month. June 11, 1845.

DOCTOR A. D. M'PHERSON

Homoeopathic Physician. Office: Main street, in the house formerly occupied by Dr. Fred. Chapman. Carlisle, April 9, 1845.

THE MANSION HOUSE HOTEL

Fronting on the Camb. Valley Rail Road, CARLISLE, PA. Is kept by Gen. Wm. Foulk, has been newly furnished and has been thoroughly repaired. Can accommodate the extra, stranger, and traveler and visitors to Carlisle, at moderate rates. The table is supplied with the best of the season's produce, and every attention paid to the comfort and convenience of those who patronize the establishment. A. WINROET, Proprietor. April 18, 1845.

ROBERT'S HOTEL

Sign of Washington and Jackson. The proprietor respectfully informs his friends and the public generally that he has removed his stock of HARDWARE, CUTLERY, and SADDLERY, to the new house on North Lancaster Street, two doors south of the Post Office, and nearly opposite his old stand, where he continues to keep as heretofore a full and complete assortment of every thing in his line of business. Cabinet Makers are especially invited to call and examine a splendid lot of MAHOGANY VENEERS, just received, Corbin's and Dill's, and all the latest styles of Brass, Iron, and Steel. Also, a large stock of Building Materials, and every variety of Building Hardware, at reduced prices. Also a new and superior article of PLAINES, warranted good, for sale. Also, a large stock of Window Glass, Sashes, and every variety of articles in the Hardware Line. Persons commencing Housekeeping will find it their interest to call before purchasing elsewhere. The books and accounts of the late firm of J. L. Lutz & Co. are in my hands, and persons indebted are requested to call and make payment to me, or to the undersigned. JOHN J. LYNE, April 18, 1845.

REMOVAL

JOHN J. LYNE respectfully informs his friends and the public generally that he has removed his stock of HARDWARE, CUTLERY, and SADDLERY, to the new house on North Lancaster Street, two doors south of the Post Office, and nearly opposite his old stand, where he continues to keep as heretofore a full and complete assortment of every thing in his line of business. Cabinet Makers are especially invited to call and examine a splendid lot of MAHOGANY VENEERS, just received, Corbin's and Dill's, and all the latest styles of Brass, Iron, and Steel. Also, a large stock of Building Materials, and every variety of Building Hardware, at reduced prices. Also a new and superior article of PLAINES, warranted good, for sale. Also, a large stock of Window Glass, Sashes, and every variety of articles in the Hardware Line. Persons commencing Housekeeping will find it their interest to call before purchasing elsewhere. The books and accounts of the late firm of J. L. Lutz & Co. are in my hands, and persons indebted are requested to call and make payment to me, or to the undersigned. JOHN J. LYNE, April 18, 1845.

NOTICE

The undersigned hereby give notice, agreeably to the constitution and laws of Pennsylvania, that they and their associates will make application to the next Legislature of Pennsylvania, for the re-charter of the name and title of "The Farmers and Mechanics Bank of Carlisle," to be incorporated as a capital stock of one hundred thousand dollars, with interest on deposits, and discounting promissory notes, and all other banking and mercantile business. JOHN RHOADS, John Keeney, Abel Keeney, Wm. Ketcher, Thos. Paxton, June 25, 1845.

CLOTHES SCOURING

We return our thanks for the patronage already bestowed on us in our line of business—the scouring of Clothes, &c. with Soap of our own manufacture. Call in drawing room and all those who desire to get their fall and winter clothing neatly cleaned from grass spots before wearing again, will find give us a call in West Point Street. The without touching the other parts of the garment if desired. Our prices will be in proportion to the quantity of work. From those who may wish to give us the care of their winter clothing, we will give you a call in West Point Street. W. E. LEY M'LER, Proprietor. June 25, 1845.

NEW DRY GOODS

CLOTHS, Cassimeres and Cassinets. Persons desiring to purchase any of the above, will find it their interest to call on the undersigned, at the "Chest Store," a large assortment of Goods, Cassimeres and Cassinets, which will be sold at reduced prices, by A. CLIPINGER, Shippenburg August 15, 1845.

DECEASED

ROBERT SHIREMAN, deceased. Notice is hereby given that letters of Administration on the estate of Robert Shireman, deceased, have been granted to the undersigned, and that he is now ready to receive the same. DANIEL SHIREMAN, Administrator. June 24, 1845.

MISCELLANEOUS

WINTER IS COMING.

Winter is coming, who cares, who cares? Not the wealthy and proud, I trow! Let them come, they cry, what matters to us? How chilly the blast may blow!

We'll feast and carouse in our lordly halls, The goblet of wine will drain; We'll meet at the wind with showers of mirth, And make the evening strain.

Little we care for the biting frost, While the fire gives forth its blaze; And what to us is the dreary night, While we dance in the waxlight's rays!

Thou'st the rich of the land will talk; But think, oh ye happy ones, That the harko wintering that ye laugh at withal, Falls back on the poor as your own!

They have blood in their veins; ay, pure as thine, But 'twould not quicken its flow; They have limbs that feel the whirling gale, And shrink from the driving snow!

Winter is coming—oh! think ye great, On the roofless, naked, and old; Dost thou think kindly, as man with man, And spare them a tittle of your gold?

A STORY OF RUSSIAN MILITARY LIFE.

The New York Commercial translates the following horrible narrative, which originally appeared in the Paris Gazette. It is a veritable story, furnished by one who was a witness of the scene described.

On the 22d of May, 1841, a battalion of military colony, which the Russian Government had recently established at Novgorod, and which closely resembles in many respects the landwehr of Prussia, was drawn up on the parade-ground adjoining the extensive barracks constructed a few years since, in the most ancient and solitary portion of the city, near the church of St. Sophia.

In front of the ranks stood General Solowiova, a tall man of fifty, remarkable for his erect carriage, his deep-set eyes, his slow complexion and his large, grey, fearless eyes. He was known throughout the army for his bravery, of which he had given many brilliant proofs in the campaigns of Turkey and Prussia; but what was to him domestic infelicities had hardened his temper, and his heart had been disciplined by the frequent application of the lash, and often horridly so.

General Solowiova, who had become a terror to the soldiers, and scarcely a day passed in which his command was not signalled by a cry of "Soldier," which well deserved to be called "the cry of death."

It was known to all that this man cherished a profound attachment for a young girl, the daughter of an old commander, arms, who had been killed in battle. He had adopted the orphan child, brought her up with care, and never allowed her to be separated from him. And she, though grateful for the kindness and affection of her father by adoption, was not the less governed by an irresistible feeling of aversion when in his presence; the result of his stern brevity of speech, his imperious manner, and the bold severity of his aspect. She was known among the troops by the expressive name of Solowiova's (nightingale) given to her in recognition of the grace with which she sang the wild paeon's ballads of the Slavonians.

Solowiova, to please the general, always appeared at the reviews and drills; and on the day when the incidents took place which hereafter to be related, she was sitting at a window of the general's quarters, in a room on the ground floor, whence her eye ranged along the extended ranks, and a bright light might be seen to glitter upon her features as, her glance rested upon a young sergeant-major named Ivan Polotov, whose many form was set off to the advantage by the simple uniform of his military grade.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

MISCELLANEOUS

WINTER IS COMING.

Winter is coming, who cares, who cares? Not the wealthy and proud, I trow! Let them come, they cry, what matters to us? How chilly the blast may blow!

We'll feast and carouse in our lordly halls, The goblet of wine will drain; We'll meet at the wind with showers of mirth, And make the evening strain.

Little we care for the biting frost, While the fire gives forth its blaze; And what to us is the dreary night, While we dance in the waxlight's rays!

Thou'st the rich of the land will talk; But think, oh ye happy ones, That the harko wintering that ye laugh at withal, Falls back on the poor as your own!

They have blood in their veins; ay, pure as thine, But 'twould not quicken its flow; They have limbs that feel the whirling gale, And shrink from the driving snow!

Winter is coming—oh! think ye great, On the roofless, naked, and old; Dost thou think kindly, as man with man, And spare them a tittle of your gold?

A STORY OF RUSSIAN MILITARY LIFE.

The New York Commercial translates the following horrible narrative, which originally appeared in the Paris Gazette. It is a veritable story, furnished by one who was a witness of the scene described.

On the 22d of May, 1841, a battalion of military colony, which the Russian Government had recently established at Novgorod, and which closely resembles in many respects the landwehr of Prussia, was drawn up on the parade-ground adjoining the extensive barracks constructed a few years since, in the most ancient and solitary portion of the city, near the church of St. Sophia.

In front of the ranks stood General Solowiova, a tall man of fifty, remarkable for his erect carriage, his deep-set eyes, his slow complexion and his large, grey, fearless eyes. He was known throughout the army for his bravery, of which he had given many brilliant proofs in the campaigns of Turkey and Prussia; but what was to him domestic infelicities had hardened his temper, and his heart had been disciplined by the frequent application of the lash, and often horridly so.

General Solowiova, who had become a terror to the soldiers, and scarcely a day passed in which his command was not signalled by a cry of "Soldier," which well deserved to be called "the cry of death."

It was known to all that this man cherished a profound attachment for a young girl, the daughter of an old commander, arms, who had been killed in battle. He had adopted the orphan child, brought her up with care, and never allowed her to be separated from him. And she, though grateful for the kindness and affection of her father by adoption, was not the less governed by an irresistible feeling of aversion when in his presence; the result of his stern brevity of speech, his imperious manner, and the bold severity of his aspect. She was known among the troops by the expressive name of Solowiova's (nightingale) given to her in recognition of the grace with which she sang the wild paeon's ballads of the Slavonians.

Solowiova, to please the general, always appeared at the reviews and drills; and on the day when the incidents took place which hereafter to be related, she was sitting at a window of the general's quarters, in a room on the ground floor, whence her eye ranged along the extended ranks, and a bright light might be seen to glitter upon her features as, her glance rested upon a young sergeant-major named Ivan Polotov, whose many form was set off to the advantage by the simple uniform of his military grade.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

MISCELLANEOUS

WINTER IS COMING.

Winter is coming, who cares, who cares? Not the wealthy and proud, I trow! Let them come, they cry, what matters to us? How chilly the blast may blow!

We'll feast and carouse in our lordly halls, The goblet of wine will drain; We'll meet at the wind with showers of mirth, And make the evening strain.

Little we care for the biting frost, While the fire gives forth its blaze; And what to us is the dreary night, While we dance in the waxlight's rays!

Thou'st the rich of the land will talk; But think, oh ye happy ones, That the harko wintering that ye laugh at withal, Falls back on the poor as your own!

They have blood in their veins; ay, pure as thine, But 'twould not quicken its flow; They have limbs that feel the whirling gale, And shrink from the driving snow!

Winter is coming—oh! think ye great, On the roofless, naked, and old; Dost thou think kindly, as man with man, And spare them a tittle of your gold?

A STORY OF RUSSIAN MILITARY LIFE.

The New York Commercial translates the following horrible narrative, which originally appeared in the Paris Gazette. It is a veritable story, furnished by one who was a witness of the scene described.

On the 22d of May, 1841, a battalion of military colony, which the Russian Government had recently established at Novgorod, and which closely resembles in many respects the landwehr of Prussia, was drawn up on the parade-ground adjoining the extensive barracks constructed a few years since, in the most ancient and solitary portion of the city, near the church of St. Sophia.

In front of the ranks stood General Solowiova, a tall man of fifty, remarkable for his erect carriage, his deep-set eyes, his slow complexion and his large, grey, fearless eyes. He was known throughout the army for his bravery, of which he had given many brilliant proofs in the campaigns of Turkey and Prussia; but what was to him domestic infelicities had hardened his temper, and his heart had been disciplined by the frequent application of the lash, and often horridly so.

General Solowiova, who had become a terror to the soldiers, and scarcely a day passed in which his command was not signalled by a cry of "Soldier," which well deserved to be called "the cry of death."

It was known to all that this man cherished a profound attachment for a young girl, the daughter of an old commander, arms, who had been killed in battle. He had adopted the orphan child, brought her up with care, and never allowed her to be separated from him. And she, though grateful for the kindness and affection of her father by adoption, was not the less governed by an irresistible feeling of aversion when in his presence; the result of his stern brevity of speech, his imperious manner, and the bold severity of his aspect. She was known among the troops by the expressive name of Solowiova's (nightingale) given to her in recognition of the grace with which she sang the wild paeon's ballads of the Slavonians.

Solowiova, to please the general, always appeared at the reviews and drills; and on the day when the incidents took place which hereafter to be related, she was sitting at a window of the general's quarters, in a room on the ground floor, whence her eye ranged along the extended ranks, and a bright light might be seen to glitter upon her features as, her glance rested upon a young sergeant-major named Ivan Polotov, whose many form was set off to the advantage by the simple uniform of his military grade.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

MISCELLANEOUS

WINTER IS COMING.

Winter is coming, who cares, who cares? Not the wealthy and proud, I trow! Let them come, they cry, what matters to us? How chilly the blast may blow!

We'll feast and carouse in our lordly halls, The goblet of wine will drain; We'll meet at the wind with showers of mirth, And make the evening strain.

Little we care for the biting frost, While the fire gives forth its blaze; And what to us is the dreary night, While we dance in the waxlight's rays!

Thou'st the rich of the land will talk; But think, oh ye happy ones, That the harko wintering that ye laugh at withal, Falls back on the poor as your own!

They have blood in their veins; ay, pure as thine, But 'twould not quicken its flow; They have limbs that feel the whirling gale, And shrink from the driving snow!

Winter is coming—oh! think ye great, On the roofless, naked, and old; Dost thou think kindly, as man with man, And spare them a tittle of your gold?

A STORY OF RUSSIAN MILITARY LIFE.

The New York Commercial translates the following horrible narrative, which originally appeared in the Paris Gazette. It is a veritable story, furnished by one who was a witness of the scene described.

On the 22d of May, 1841, a battalion of military colony, which the Russian Government had recently established at Novgorod, and which closely resembles in many respects the landwehr of Prussia, was drawn up on the parade-ground adjoining the extensive barracks constructed a few years since, in the most ancient and solitary portion of the city, near the church of St. Sophia.

In front of the ranks stood General Solowiova, a tall man of fifty, remarkable for his erect carriage, his deep-set eyes, his slow complexion and his large, grey, fearless eyes. He was known throughout the army for his bravery, of which he had given many brilliant proofs in the campaigns of Turkey and Prussia; but what was to him domestic infelicities had hardened his temper, and his heart had been disciplined by the frequent application of the lash, and often horridly so.

General Solowiova, who had become a terror to the soldiers, and scarcely a day passed in which his command was not signalled by a cry of "Soldier," which well deserved to be called "the cry of death."

It was known to all that this man cherished a profound attachment for a young girl, the daughter of an old commander, arms, who had been killed in battle. He had adopted the orphan child, brought her up with care, and never allowed her to be separated from him. And she, though grateful for the kindness and affection of her father by adoption, was not the less governed by an irresistible feeling of aversion when in his presence; the result of his stern brevity of speech, his imperious manner, and the bold severity of his aspect. She was known among the troops by the expressive name of Solowiova's (nightingale) given to her in recognition of the grace with which she sang the wild paeon's ballads of the Slavonians.

Solowiova, to please the general, always appeared at the reviews and drills; and on the day when the incidents took place which hereafter to be related, she was sitting at a window of the general's quarters, in a room on the ground floor, whence her eye ranged along the extended ranks, and a bright light might be seen to glitter upon her features as, her glance rested upon a young sergeant-major named Ivan Polotov, whose many form was set off to the advantage by the simple uniform of his military grade.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.

General Solowiova, though tall and thin, with a stern and somewhat morose expression, and a cold and unyielding countenance, was not without a certain amount of humanity. He was known to be a man of a noble and generous heart, and he was not without a certain amount of humanity.