I have here the speech made by Mr Ross, in support of his resolutions, pro posing to seize the mouth of the Missis-sippi and the adjacent territory, without negotiations; and the speech, sir, is very much a counterpart of some that I have heard of during the discussions that have taken place since this war commenced Mr. Ross urged that it was convenient and necessary to seize upon the territory. Certainly he had a right to say so. He insisted that we should not wait for nego tintion : and of course he urged that those who held the territory had no title to it: But what was the course adopted in those days of Jeffersonian democ-racy? Did Mr. Jefferson raise an army to march upon and seize the territory or to point our cannon into the windows of New Orleans, and thus provoke a conflict? Did any such spirit as that which seems to rage here with an unbridled fury, pervade the democracy of that par-ty? No, sir; no sir.
