Doctry

THE WORLD IS FULL OF BEAUTY.

There is a voice within us,
That is never哑,
That its soft sighs with me
In the hour of my grief,
And in the hour of my joy,
And in the hour of my death,
It is the voice of God,
That speaks to my soul,
And says, "The world is full of beauty."
The flowers of the field,
The birds of the air,
The mountains and the hills,
The valleys and the plains,
The sun and the moon,
The stars and the planets,
The earth and the sky,
The world is full of beauty,
And God is full of love.

Miscellaneous

A Wedding in the Gate of the Rocky Mountains.

The incidents of the following striking story were told to the writer by one of the persons present—and are, therefore, true. They give a vivid picture of the dangers to which the hardy pioneers of the Pacific were exposed on their painful journey to their new homes. We copy from the Democrat-Review for February.

On the evening of the 4th of July, 1844, four families of emigrants, might be seen, on the main trail from Missouri to Oregon and Upper California. They had left Independence, the common point of departure for those who were bound for the Pacific, and were now in the midst of a long and arduous journey. The party consisted of a man, a woman, and two children, and a pack of mules and horses. They were all dressed in the simple, rugged clothing of the pioneers. The man was a tall, sturdy fellow, with a weathered face and a pair of eyes that had seen many a hard day. The woman was a stout, good-looking creature, with a broad smile and a heart as true as steel. The children were two bright, healthy boys, who were full of life and energy. The pack was loaded with provisions, tools, and other necessities for the journey. They were all well, and in good spirits, and were looking forward to the day when they would reach their new homes.

As they were about to start on their journey, they were met by a man who was dressed in the same simple, rugged clothing as they were. He was a tall, thin fellow, with a long, thin nose and a pair of eyes that were full of fire. He was the leader of a party of men who were known as the "Carlistes." They were a band of men who were devoted to the cause of the "Carlistes," and were known for their bravery and their loyalty. They were all dressed in the same simple, rugged clothing as they were, and were all well, and in good spirits. They were looking forward to the day when they would reach their new homes.
