CARLISLE, PENN'A The County Newspaper Tts Value to the Community. The English traveller, Lyell; in his work on the United States, recently published, says no one lact excited his attention more strongly than the fact that in this county "every fown had its own newspaper." After expressing his surprise at this, he remarks, "it is known no where else, but the reason is, that no. where else, but the reason is of life are monopolized by great men and great cities every where else, here they are diffused more equally. And-why should not newspapers follow the same laws ! Has the inhabitant of the country village or box-rough no wants to be supplied, or wishes to be made known ? Has he no events after memory of which he wishes to be presented munoticed or unknown—no voice to affi-nuonce his entrance of his exit? The coun-try newspaper can alone supply the want. The city newspaper can alone supply the want. The terry newspaper can alone supply the want. The

The editor plods through a mass of materials such as no private individual could have access to of time to read, and selects all that is of a gen-eral interest, in the news of the weck, and places it in his columns. The city merchant, who has goods calculated for the section of the country in which it is placed, sends hus adventisements there. All the wants of the district are made known there. You cannot take any paper from the city with the assu-rance that what you look for will be found there. One man patronizes one, and another; but where a place has a news-paper of its own, there you will certainly find what yeu want.
