STIRRING THE EARTH. In frequently stirring the earth, there are several ad vantages. It loosens the soil, and makes it permeable to roots of plants. It finely pulverizes the soil, reducing the sods and clods, and mixes the different kinds of layers of soil turned up by the plough together, and mixes the manure finely with the soil. We have plowed green-sward for immediate sowing with fine seeds, and by manuring, and the frequent use of the harrow and cultivator, we have made it of fine tilth, and well adapted to tender plants, like old, mellow soil. By stirring the soil often, so as to present new surfaces to the air, ir - bee enriched by the 'elements imbibed from the atmosphere. But if the earth is al lowed to rest, a crust is formed at the tops and no improvement of consequence takes or cultivating land often, in order to kill witch or cough grass, sorrel, or other noxious plants, the soil becomes improved by the means used to eradicate the weeds with which it is infested; so that the whole labor is not spent merely to destroy the cumberers of the ground. The soil that is turned up in deep ploughing, or that works up immediately in subsoil plowing, becomes gently improved on exposure to the atmosphere, and frequent stirring.

By stirring the soil, weeds are destroyed in their tender age, before they become large, to rob the plants of nutriment or require a great deal of labor to destroy them. If the farmer can keep ahead of his work so as to stir his tillage land often, just as the weeds have started, he will save a great deal of labor, besides gaining an advantage in having his land in the best condition in other respects for a good crop. Some writer says, in . regard to manuring: - "Feed your crop, and your crop will feed you;" and it may, with equal propriety, be said, "protect your crop against the weeds, and your crop will protect you against want." Frequent stirring the soil is the cheapest and most effectual protection of crops against drought, The soil that is often stirred, in a dry time, is moist almost to the surface, while that which is neglected, or lands in grass or small grains, which do not admit of this operation, are dry to a great depth; and this is one reason why wheat sowed in drills, and cultivated as other crops sowed in the same way, yields more than that which 1 \ sowed broadcast. At another time, we may make further remarks on the sub-
