Among them, Las Casas was particularly distinguished too his zealous efforts. Prompted by the most benevolent motives, he proposed the plan of purchasing persons already enslaved in Africa, who were better fitted, by constitution, to ca, who were better fitted, by constitution, to endure the labor of mining. His plan was adopted, and, for the object in view, was tound successful, but it fastened upon that country the greatest evil of modern times.

> The expression of Mr. Calhoun tha ve are now living under a despotism an absolute as that of the Autocrat of Russia, reminds us of a story we once heard. A Yankee was conversing with an Englishman, and answering the various questions put 'to" him about this country. Finally the Englishman exclaimed, after obtaining all the information he could about our government, "Well! you Yankees must be a very miserable people." This was a new idea to the Yankee, who after considering the matter a short time said, "Well I guess we are, but we don't know it." So it is with us poor unionists. It we are living under a despotism, we don't

Admission of States.

The modes by which States have been admitted into the Union have been so various, says the Baltimore American, that there seems to be no specific rule upon the subject. The Constitution prescribes no formula. It simply says that "new States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union, but no new State shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State; nor any state be formed by the junction of two or more States or parts of States, without the consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress."-There is an implied condition that the form of government of every State shall be repubcan-an implication which grows out of the provision of the fourth section of Article

Fourth, which declares that "The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government." We find in the New Orleans Picayone a particular account of the admission of each new State, since the establishment of our national independence. Vermont was the first. She was received in 1791. No constitution was submitted to Congress or inquired for by that body. In fact the permanent constitution of the new State was not made until 1793. Kentucky come next .--Her territory once belonged to Virginia, but was detached by act of the Legislature of Virginia in 1789. In 1791 an act of Congress directed that Kentucky should on the first day of June, 1792, "be received and admitted into the Union as a new and enlire member of the United States of America/,,— The State constitution was not framed when the act of admission was passed. The third State was Tennessee, formed out of ternitory ceded by North Carolina to the United States on condition that it should become a State. The people of the Territory framed a Constitution in 1796, submitted it to Congress, and the State was admitted .-This was the first State Constitution ever submitted to Congress with an application for admission.

Ohio was the fourth of the new States-"the first" says the Picayune, "formed of tenitory to which boundaries were affixed and previous governments assigned by the exclusive authority of the Unitid States." It constituted the Eastern District of the North Western Territory, to all of which the ordinance of 1787 applied. The act of admission, which was passed in 1803, recited that the people of the Eastern District of the North West Territory had formed for themselves a Constitution and State Government, "whereby the said State has become one of the United States." The phraseology is no-ed as peculiar. Louisiana, Indiana, Mississippi, Illinois, and Alabama were admitted severally in the order named, and in the case of each there was a previous act of Congress authorizing the calling of a convention to organize a State government.

Maine, originally a part of Massachusetta, came in as the tenth New State. It appears that there was no action of Congress previously in her case; but the Legislature of Massachusetts gave consent in 1819 that the people of the District of Maine should form a State Constitution. This was done and the State of Maine was admitted in 1820.

Missouri, the eleventh in order, formed out of the Louisiana territory, applied for leave to form a State Constitution; and it was upon this application that the restrictive clause concerning slavery was attempted to be applied. This gave rise to the Missouri compromise, and upon the adjustment of all conflicting matters the State was declared a State of the Union in 1821 by the President's Proclamation.

Arkaness and Michigan were admitted by one act of Congress in 1836-the former without condition, the latter prospectivelythere being some questions of boundary involved. The constitutions of both States were made by conventions of the people without any previous action of Congress.-The same was the case with Florida, which was a condition relative to boundary applied o lows which she did not comply with in form, but did substantially by presenting a new Constitution, which being accepted by Congress she came into the Union in 1846. The mode of the admission of Texas is familiarly known. Wisconsin, the last of the new States, went through the regular form of Territorial organization and formed its State Constitution under authority of an act of Congress.

We have condensed these particulars from the Picayune and have no doubt of their ag. curacy. It will be seen that the application of California, under the circumstances of her case, is not without precedents. Congress has generally been, very liberally disposed towards new States applying for admission, showing a willingness to recognize and ratify the doings of the people in the territories. at in Anton man i 🕏

Expensive Gabble. - A Georgia paper . makes the following extract and comment:-"In the Kentucky Convention one man spoke 200 times another 180, and another 100. There were a lew members in the Georgia Legislature who beat the above fall hollow.' It is estimated that one gentleman made on an average seven speeches per day tor eighty seven days, being six hundred and nine speeches during the session la The cost of these speeces to the Treasury could not have been much under eighteen thousand dollars.

A little girl only nine years of age. was asked at the Drollwich Sunday School to explain the meaning of the words in Proverbs-"A soft answer turneth away wrath;" and after a little hesitation, made the following rude but expressive answer:- 'Why, please ma'am, it's when a body well jaws a body and you doesn't bang at 'em again."
