Does Nature Provide a Compass?

Our curiosity has often been excited by the fact that buds and different anials find their way so readily to parts far distant, though they are perfect stran-gers to the regions over which they pass, as well as to the place to which they journey; their whole previous life having been spent, perhaps, within the narrow circuit of the place which gave them birth.

The swallow rears its young under our eaves. As soon as they can fly, they are busily engaged in seeking their food, and are ever on the wing, But they never wander very far from the neighborhood where they entered upon life. Summer, however draws to a close, and the chilly mornings and evenings of autumn give them a warning that a warmer-latitude must be sought; and soon these little philosophers had a consultation, ard, after ina king a few flights, as if to assure themselves of the requisite strength of wing, or learn something necessary to their success, they, like Abraham leaving his father's house, journey southward. But Abraham knew not where he went. We do not know, however, that we can say this of our little adventurers, for they appear to know well. They do not go as, if they thought they would be pilgrims and aliens in a strange land. They seem to expect other towns, and perhaps lar ger cities, where they can pursue their honest calling, and feel equal, if not superior, to the citizens of their new found home. If they were experienced man ners, aiming for a distant port, and having the compass for their guide, they could not sicer their tiny barks through the stormy elements with greater precision.

The carrier pigeon is frequently taken hundreds of miles from its home, and then with a billet attached, it is set free. It mounts mounts high and makes sever al large circles, as if taking observations before it commences the journey ; and then at once, as if it had found a hidden track, it starts off in a straight line ; and the rain may beat and the winds blow. but it nover forsakes its course until i arrives at its wished for home.

The camels of the desert are described by travelers as possessing a similar peculiar instinct, those used on frequented routes do not exhibit. Though there be not the slightest sign of a track, they never fail to chose the right line. One of the camels take the lead, advances at first very cautiously, taking now one direction, and then another, until he appears to have discovered a true course ; and in this he proceeds, followed by the others, never deviating from the chosen line, untill he arrives at his journey's end.

The question presses itself upon us must there not be some pole star to which these tiny voyagers of the air, as well as the larger wanderers of the desert, look which guides them to their desired haven'? Can they know the points of the compass? Is the sun their guide by day, and the stars by night ? Or is that electric current which points the compass to the north, and furnishes the adventurous traveler with a guide through unknown paths, also the director of their course ? Can they inform themselves of i's existence, and can they use it, like the mariner to tell the way?

I We can prove that animals are susceptible of electrical impressions. Professors profound in research. have turned their attention to the connection existing between electricity and the nervous system. We are not speaking of the mysteries of mesmerism, but of the experiments reported in leading scientific works. A small wire, having one end inserted in the nerve of a man's arm, and on the other end, having a needle mag netic, and cause it to turn to the north; or, brouhgt into contact with very fine iron filings, will attract them. Take a number of frogs, cut off their legs, place these together, so as to form a voltaic pile, and with this connect a wire, on the other end of which is a needle balanced. the result will be the same. Such experiments at once prove the intimacy existing betwen electricity and animated nature. The habits of birds and animals are studied by farmers and others : and from them they prognosticate an approaching storm. In such cases, is not the elec tricity of the atmosphere the principal agent in producing the peculiar effects which we observe? Are we not even ourselves sensible of these influences? Nervous persons are much affected by atmospheric changes, which is owing to their succeptibility of electrical impressions .- Some individuals are influenced by the electric current in a peculiar, manner. We read of a physician who could only sleep with his head towards the north. The head of his head was south, and when he retired he was for a long time restless; and in the morning, when he woke, he always found that in the night he had turned in the bed; and his head was north. He then had his bed reversed, the head being placed north, and he afterwards found no difficulty in obtaining sleep. May not the short flights which the swallows, when collected for departure, perform in different directions, before they take their final leave, be their in. stinctive efforts to asure themselves of the direction of the electric current ? And -may not the circle made by the carrier pigeon, on the commencemnt of its journey, be for the same purpose ? And why that cautious exercise of some "mysterious sense" by the camel of the desert, before he takes the devious way over the trackless waste, if not to obtain a knowledge of that unseen power which take the needle, and teaches it to guide the mariner over the deep? Does not the torpedo know at once whether a body is electric or not; and, unless it wishes to communicate a shock, avoid coming in contact with substances that would rob it of its electricity ?---Why then should not some birds and animals know the great electric current, and from it gain the knowledge of direction which they possess in so superior a degree ?
