world, the flesh, and the devil, we can, do so only by making our religious belief something more than the mere mechanical repetition of the lips, or the passive acquiescence of the understanding. We must seek after holiness as a practical habit, which comes not unsought, but which must be anxiously courted by us, before it will become an inmate of the heart. We must call down the aid of God's Holy Spirit by prayer, cherishing its visitations, and holding and clinging to it that it depart not again from us. We must make our religion, in the strictest sense of the word, ourprofession. We must bring near to us, by a continuous and anxious effort those awful future realities which may at this moment appear small, because placed at some distance, but which will one day come upon us in their full and tremendous proportions. We must learn to know the immense importance of our souls, and then we shall not be niggard of the price to purchase their security. High inducements such as I now describe, detach us from this world, not by a painful disruption of the thousand ties which connect us with it, but by making those ties adhere to us more closely, and quiet their hold upon our slightest efforts to shake them off.

"I have set God always before, me," says the Pealmist, "for he is on my right hand, therefore I shall not fall." Such is the infallible, as it is also the only -rule for the attainment of true-Scripturalholiness. If we aim at it by humbler and merely human means, we shall effect but little or nothing. We shall walk, like the children of this world, "in a vain shadow, and disquiet ourselves in vain." We shall toil, but it will be for corruptible possessions ;; and in proportion as we draw nearer and nearer to them, the mutual attraction which, in this life, must ever, in some degree, exist between them and ourselves, will become daily and hourly the stronger .--Under such circumstances, we shall, indeed, with perfect truth, lament our own inability to resist temptation ; but the blame which with equal folly and wickedness we thus plead, not only as an excuse for the past, but as an encouragement to future sins, will not be God's but our own .- Dr. Shuttleworth's Sermons.
