Drawnigh to the Holy,
Rend low at His throne;
There, penitent lowly
They, sinfulness own.
There, there, if thou yearnest
For partion and rest,
There, forvent and carnest,
Profer the vicance, Prefer thy request.

Confess thy backsliding, Thy weakness and fears: In Jesus confiding,
There pour out thy tears:
Think not He will scorn thee, Though wretched thy case; His hand will adorn thee

With garments of grace. More precious than treasure, vast than the sea, His love has no measure Nor limit to thee. His easy yoke wearing,
His pleasure abide;
In all thy cross-bearing,
He'll walk by thy side.

Fear not the wild clanger That Satan may raise, So God's righteous anger But pass from thy ways. Whom Christ has forgiven

Goes safely along, Till in the high heaven He sings the new song.

Then kneel to the Holy, There penitent, lowly,
Thy sinfulness own; There, Soul! if thou yearnest For pardon and rest,
There, fervent and carnest,
Prefer thy request.

THE MOTHER'S LAST LESSON.

"Will you please teach me my verse, mam ma, and then kiss me, and bid me good night?" said little Roger L , as he opened the door and peeped cautiously into the chamber of his sick mother: 'I am very sleepy and no one has heard me say my prayers."

Mrs. L was very ill-indeed her attendants believed her to be dying. She sat propped up with pillows, and struggling for breath; her lips were white, her eyes were growing dull and glazed. She was a widow and little Roger was her only-her darling child. Every night he had been in the habit of coming into her room and sitting in her lap, or kneeling by her side, whilst she repeated passages from God's holy word, or related to him stories of wise and good men spoken of in its pages.

"Hush!" said a lady who was watching beside her couch. "Your dear mother is too ill to hear you to-night." Ap-she said this, she came forward, and laid her hand gently upon his arm, as if she would lead him from the his arm, as it sale would read nim from the room. Roger began to sob as if his heart would break.

"I cannot go to bed without saying my prayers—indeed I cannot."

The ear of the dying mother caught the sound. Although she had been nearly insensible to everything transpiring around her, the sob of her darling aroused her stuper, and turning to a ffiend she desired her to bring her little son and lay him on her beson. Her request was granted, and the child's rosy cheek and golden hair nestled beside the coldered in the dying mother. prayers-indeed I cannot." face of his dying mother.
"Roger, my son, my darling child," said the dying woman, threpeat this verse after me and never, nover forget it—'whon my father and mother forsake me, the Lord will take me up.' The child repeated it two or three times distinctly, and eaid his little prayer. Then lie kissed the cold, almost rigid features before him, and went quietly to his couch. The next morning he sought, as usual, his mother, but he found her stiff and cold.

This was her less the search the heaves the conditions and the sought as the search the sea

This was her last lesson. He has never forgotten it—he probably nover will. He has grown to be a man—a good man, and now occupies a post of honor and profit in Massachustis. I never could lock true historial. setts. I never could look upon him withou thinking about the faith so beautifully exhibi ted by his dying mother.

DEATH IS SILENT.

In the city while men are brawling in the crowded streets, death is entering the secret chambers, and friends sit pallid by the couches of the breathless, or love is drinking in the sigh which bears the soul to heaven. Death is sigh which bears the soul to heaven. Death is silent; those whose every look spoke to us in iife, pass from our sight as the shadow from the dial, and the music of their words become the dial, and the music of their words become sad echoes in the distance of our memory.— Death is silent. Tempests shrick madly upon the ocean, and many are they who sink with this requiem into their fathomless grave; but from the depths of that sunshine sepulchre no sound comes back to tell of those who perished. Death is silent, yet not so entirely; silent it is to the air, but not always to the heart. Our brethren are still bound to us, and though dead, they have not ceased to be.— There is much to be felt and learned where they rest.

Humility has instruction from the proud man's monument, and contentment a lesson from the vanity that overlies his ctay. There is pathos in solitude where the stranger sleeps; there is mute cloquence inhis unlettered grave; there is beauty in the poor man's epitaph, inscribed honestly by affection; there is sublimity in the rude sepulchre of the peasant's tomb, when it is an effort to symbolize an immortal faith. And it is such faith which takes terror from the power of death, and despair from the silence of the grave. That which belongs to carth must go to carth, and when carth claims and gets back its atoms, God gathers up and calls home his spirit.—Rev. M. Giles.
