Several workmen were immediately attracted to the spot, and he was -taken from his perilous situation much burned about the face, neck and hands, and conveyed to his boarding house in the vicinity, where he suffered the greatest agony, and lingered on until 4 o'clock on Thursday afternoon, when he died. "The Norristown Herald says:--"While Kearney was in the "fiery furnace," and a red hot wall within five feet of him on all sides was literally roasting him alivo, he displayed d'heroism almost romantic in its ondurance. While the persons above him were excited, and were debating the best means of extricating him, he was calm and; self-posse sed and directed them in the way they should, act. At his suggestion a ladder was procured, and when a person engaged in offerts for his roliof suggested that water should be poured upon him, he reminded them of the danger which would attend it, and the arguration which it would be to his then sufferings. Attor the hadder was put down, he accorded it without assistance, the skin from his hands adhering to each round as he touched them. On reaching the top, and directions having been given to send for a Physician, he told thom there was no use, that he was scriously injured he knew he must die. He was con-veyed home and after about twelve hours ter-rible suffering he expired."
