Shall close my days.

Until my raptured ear Eternal songs shall hear,
With harpings blest;
And in the church above, Whose ritual is love, Find perfect rest. THE CONTRAST. .

I saw a vast multitude of the sick and dying, all fust hardening to death, and I heard a voice saying to such and all, Thore is life for the asking; and there was but one or two of all that great company raised their voices to begins heard.

the boom.

I saw a band of weary travellers, in a sandy desert, parched with thirst, and faint beneath the rays of the burning sun; and I heard a voice saying to them, 'There is water for the seeking.' 'Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters!' and directly in sight appeared a cool and sparkling fountain, gushing from a rock which threw its deep shadow across the 'weary land;' and but few there were who made the effort to reach the grateful shed, of

'weary land;' and but few there were who made the effort to reach the grateful shade of the rock, or to slake their thirst in its waters.

'There is gold for the digging,' proclaims another voice; and thousands of eager questioners ery, 'Where—where?' Far, far away, over the deep waters, across the dangerous passes of the mountains; danger and disease must be met, privation and hunger must be brayed—but what of all that? there is 'gold for the digging,' at the end. And how they throng, and press, and crowd, to reach that far off land.

'What shall it profit a man if he gain the

"What shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul; or what, when it is lost, 'shall he give in exchange for his woul?

LIFE'S LAST HOURS.

Life's last hours are grand testing hours .-Death tries all our principles, and lays bare all our foundations. Vast numbers have been found to act the hypocrite in life, who were forced to be honest in the hour of death. atheists have owned their madness, what infi-dels have denounced their principles, what worldlings have bewailed their folly when death approached. Misgivings of heart that have been kept secret through life, have come out in death; and many who seemed all fair and right for glory, have had to declare that they had only been self-deceived. It has been said, for glory, have had to declare that they had only been self-deceived. It has been said, 'Men may dissemble through life, but none ever dissemble in death;' hence the value of dying testimonies. We gather the last words, the last acts, the last experiences; and we treature them up as the indubitable evidences in favor of, or against the character of those that were their subjects. None have ever impugned their value as tests of character, and all have felt their force.

"THY WILL BE DONE."

The great work of life is to bring our will into subjection to the will of God. If we had no will but His, if we could say from the heart, as our Saviour hath taught and commanded us to say, 'Thy will be done,' we should be happy. It is the standard at which we ought to sim; in the language of Archibishop Leighton, 'Our will should be rooted out, and the will of God should be put in its stead. It was the standard which our Saviour reached: 'Verily, verily I say unto you, the Son can do nothing of himself but what he seeth the Father do, for what things seever he deeth, these also doeth the Son likewise. It is quite evident that these words, taken in their full extent, are a proof of our Lord's divinity, but we also see clearly, that in his humanity, his will was to do the will of Him.by...whom he was sent.

CONSOLING IDEA OF DEATH.

'I congratulate you and myself,' wrote John Foster to a friend, 'that life is passing away. What a superlatively grand and consoling idea is that of death! Without this radiant idea, this delightful morning star, indicating that the luminary of eternity is going to rise, life would, to my view, darken into midnight melancholy. Of the expectation of living here and living thus, always, would be indeed a prospect of overwhelming despair. But thanks to that fatal decree that dooms us to diethanks to that Gospol which opens the vision of an endless life; and thanks, above all, to that Saviour friend who, has promised to conduct all the faithful through the second transce duct all the faithful through the sucred trance of death into a scene of paradise and everlas-ting delight.

For He that hath slight thoughts of sin, ne er had great thoughts of God.—Owen.
