Chemistry applied to Agriculture

The true principles of farming are just beginning to be understood. It is but a few years, at least in this country, since the farmer has sought assistance, in his important vocation, from the safe and sure guard of science. The processes of the culture of the soil have been handed down from father to son for a long period of time without any attempt at improvement. The time has already past when the tiller of the soil was content to produce just a sufficiency for the support of animal life, and that too of an indifferent kind. He has already begun to reap the advantages of calling in scientific principles to his assistance.

Within a few years much has been done to improve in a high degree- the choice and delicious fruits of our climate. Our markets are now loaded with fruits of the most tempting kind, which, by their abundance are brought within the reach of all classes of society. Who can estimate the amount of happiness and substantial comfort thus bestowed on mankınd.

For the last fifty years the energies of science have been in an unparalleled degree bestowed upon inventions and discoveries in the principles of mechanics and the multifarious modifications in machinery, growing out of the motive power of steam. Let the same amount of scientific energy be applied to the investigation of the laws which govern organized bodies, both vegetable and animal, and the result of such investigation will no doubt be the knowledge of organized matter astounding as those remarkable physical laws which we are daily witnessing.

The whole community are beginning to be waked up to the importance of this matter. Our schools, especially in this State, are introducing the study of the principles of chemistry, as applied to agriculture. The guardians of the State Normal School are doing much towards disseminating a knowledge of these principles, by preparing its pupils for teaching the same in the schools which they may hereafter be called to take charge of. When the teachers of our schools can be made to feel the importance of this new branch of education, we may expect rapid and permanent improvements in farming. It is in our common schools alone that a large portion of our farming population are educated, and for this reason it would seem very proper that considerable attention should be given to this branch of education in these schools.-Let all who are intrusted with the supervision of schools see that encouragement is given to this study .- (Albany Journal.

Among the numerous discoveries Science has made in this generation to incultate the business of life—increase its enjoyment, and even prolong he term of human extitence, none can be named of more real value to mankind, than this contribution of Chemistry to the Healing Art. A vast trial of its virtues throughout this broad country, has proven beyond a doubt, that no medicine or committion of medicines yet known, can so surely control and cure the numerous varieties of palmonary disease which liave hitherto swept figm our midst thousands and thousands every year. Indeed, there is now abundan reason to believe a Remedy has at length been found which can be relied on to cure the mast dangerous affections of the lungs. Our space here will not permit us to publish any proportion of the cures effected by its use, but we would present the following opinions of eminent men, and refer further enquiry to the circular which the Adants below named, will always be pleased to farmsh free, wherein are full particulars, and indispunsble proof of these facts. From the President of the reference of deep seated Bronchitis, and am satisfied from its chemical constitution, that it is an admirable compound for the relief of laryngial and bronchial difficulties.— If my opinion as to its superior character can be of any service, you are at liberty to use it as you think proper.
