Farming Must Thrive.

When the year nineteen hundred shall have been borne on the rapid car of time, and, proclaimed in our midst, what an advancement will have been made in the arts and sciences, and the various depart. ments of agriculture, if new inventions and improvements continue to be put forth to the world as they have been for the last half century. Who of us can imagine the improvements that will be made in the cause of agriculture during the next fifty years?

Judging from the past, when the yea nineteen hundred shall have dawned up on us the profession of agriculture will b as much coveted and sought after, as was once considered low and disgraceful Time was when farming was thought especially by the young, to be a very un popular and low business. How many a young man has forsaken a comfortable home and farm, and apprenticed himsel to some village grocer, because, forsooth, farming was degraded | But a new era is dawning upon this western continent; people are begining to open their eyes to their true interest, and the interests of the Whole country,

While great improvements have been made and are still making, in the arts and sciences, the cause of agriculture has not been left in the rear. With giant force she has plowed her way through and with eagle wings she is fast soaring towards the summit of her glory. There was a time when the farmer would grow crops upon his soil so long as the land would yield him an equivalent for his labor, without the use of manure or compost, and then "pull up stakes," and turn his face with the emigrant towards the western wilderness. A different state of things is brought about. The soil is cared for, and every waste material is tui ned to account. Thus the land is enwarding the husbandman with an abund ant harvest for his labors. Farming is not now confined to the more ignorant classes of society, as men of talent and wealth have become engaged in it, thu showing to the world that to be a tiller of the soil is no mean ocupation.

Since the existence of the numerous machinations of mankind to obtain mor ey without a resort to manual labor, the honest yeoman, by pursuing his honora ble occupation, in earning his bread by the sweat of his brow, has won for him nelf unfading laurels, and is receiving the attention and respect of all classes of the community. The time will come, and that too before the nineteenth century shall have been numbered with the past when farming will become the leading occupation of the day, and those who are now leaving the plow for the city will be as eager to return to the plow, and enjoy the comforts of the farmer's life in th country, as they were anxious to leave it These are the writer's humble predic-

Large and Small Potatoes.

W. R. Coppock, of Buffalo, well known to the horticultural public, in a late address before the Erie Co. Agricultural Society, gives his views and states the following facts, which we believe will accord with general experience, always excepting the influenc of draught, which in some cases will wither and dry up small portions of the "seed" potatoes; before they have imparted sufficient moisture to the young plant, which is the reason why uncut potatoes are sometimes

"It has been a mooted question in growing potatoes, whether it was an esfinest and best matured tubers for seeds, adopting the maxim that 'like produces This point I feel satisfied I have fully tested, and as it is one of pecuniary interest to the farmer, I take this opportunity of declaring the result of my numerous experiments. In the first place We have erred in supposing the tuber to be the true seed, which it is not; the seed being in the ball. The potato or tuber being merely the underground root, and increased by elongation. This being ihe fact, there is no analogy in the max-im and results fully prove there is no necessity to plant large potatoes in order to produce large return. of the coarser varieties, by planting simply the parings as taken off by the cook; but in this case, by throwing so many eyes into a hole, although numerous,

they were mostly small.

The last season I planted two acres of the pink-eye varieties. The rows were twenty rods long. The seed selected of the under-size or medium, excepting six rows which were of the smallest kind. usually called pig potatoes. I sort my potatoes into three sizes, thus-large, for sale; medium or small, for seed; and the balance, none larger than an inch in diameter, are boiled for the pigs, poultry, etc!" Being short of seed for the ground 6 prepared, I order these cullings, not larger than a common marble or hickory mut, to be used to finish out with. The result is these six rows are equal in eve-Ty respect, and by the diggers thought to be better, than any other portion of the whole plot.
