The Farmer.

Old Humphrey and the Farmer. I love to hear of any one being con vinced of an error, but especially an ob-klinate man. Again and again hus it been said, thay of all people in the world, farmers are the most opinionated; that they do things for no beller reason than that of their father's, having done them gen-prations before ; that they have a will of their own, and that the whole world can not turn them. Some such farmers have I known certainly, but still with irnth can I say, that I number among my country friends not a few of a contrary kind: The other day I was in conversation with my old friend John Ashfield of Elighfield farm, a man from whom I bave learned much; though when I tell him so, he usually replies; "The boot is on the other leg, Mr. Humphrey ; the boot is on the other leg." We were talk ing over old times together-but you shall have the account that he gave of himself, as well as I can remember in his own words.

I have been as obstinate, pig headed a man in my time, I suppose, as ever strode across a furrow; but the day has gone by now, and high time that it had. The til h of my plough land, and the sward of my grass land, are different to what they used to be.

Fifty years ago, James Holt was my neighbor. A wiser man than I was of ever shall be was James, though at that time I did not think so. When wheel ploughs were getting common, he says to me ; 'Neighbor Ashfield, you are falling behind the times, you must set up a wheel plough or two?' "I won't' said I. 'My father never had a wheel plough on the farm, and why should I ? You know, Mr. Humphrey, that far mers were always blunt in their speech, and no one more so than farmer Ash

.When draining came into use more than it had ever been before, my neigh-bor says to me : 'You are standing in your own light, in not draining your land more than you do; but better late than never. Better begin now.' won't, says I; det those cut up their meadows, and lay out their money-ir slough tiles, that like; my mendows shal remain as they slovays have been.

Well,' says he, 'at any rate trim up your hedges and headlands, or 'adlands, as you call them, a little closer. There's a deal of land lost on your farm. Trim up your hedges and headlands.'.

"I won't,' says I ; 'My father was as good a farmer as any in the parish; he knew what he was about as well as you do; and he never trimmed up his head. lands more than I do.'

Soon after this he was at me again ... Your land is sliff, neighbor, says he

I would advise you to try one of the new fashioned clod crushers, for you would find it an advantage. I wont said I. Such jimcracks may suit some people, but they wont suit me, my harrows break the ground quite as well or better than a clod crusher; if some folks as I could mention were half as fond of work as they are of new whims, it would be to their credit.

Neighbor Ashfield, says he, a year or awo after threshing machines had come in fashion, you and I must do as other er people do-we must set up a thresh ing machine.

I wont, says I. Why should I do that, that my father never did? And why should I take the bread out of the mouth of the laboring man ? But never did I see my neighbor more in earnest than when he came to ask me to give something towards the Sunday Schools. Lend them a helping hand, said he; for they are doing more good ir the parish than you think for.

FRUITS AND NUTS

I wont, said 1. We never used to have Sunday Schools, and plough lads and dairy maids do none too much as it What they will do if you make scholars of them. I cant tell.

All this time I thought myself wondrous wise in not being led astray by the new fangled notions of my neighbors; but at last my eyes were opened, for there was not a farmer in the Parish who hadn't better crops than I had.""

I saw that my neighbor with a wheel plough could do without a driver, and hold the plough tail with half the trouble that it cost me, so I set up three or four wheel ploughs ; and what I could do without them now it would be hard to say.

Keep your lend wet at ton and dry at hattomisaid my neighbor, when I began to listen to him. I took his advice, had my meadows well drained, and never had any cause to grudge either the expense or the trouble. He who/doesn't drain his farm, if it is a wet one, is draining his own purse by bad management.

I looked about me and saw that I lost an acre or two of ground by my slovenly, hedges - and headlands; so I set to work and had them trimmed up close. It was a foolish thing that this was not done before.

I was backward enough in venturing on a heavy iron press wheel clod crusher; but when I did, I found more work done by it, than half a dozen pair of harrows would do No one can persuado me to set it aside now. Nobody stood stiffer than I did against the threshing machines ; but for all that, when I saw how easily my neighbor could turn a hundred bushels a day out the straw, while my men thumping away with their flails did so little, I gave way at once, and set up a machine myself. As my neighbor had got the better of my obstinacy in so many things, it was not at all likely he would give up trying me again hbout the Sunday Schools. At last he beat me there, too. For many years liave I supported them, and never shall they need a pound while I have one to give.

At the present time, though I am not fend of running nock or nothing after every new thing, I keep my eyes open to see, and my cars open to hear; quite disposed to believe that my neighbors are as wise as I am, and to profit by their judgment as well as my own. It has often surprised me to think, that, after setting my face against wheel ploughs, draining, clod orushers, threshing machines, and Sunday Schools, I shall adopt them all, but I believe Mr. Humphrey, the real truth to be this, that I never saw the ill condition of my own farm; till it pleased God to show me the evil of my own heart. This it was that opened interes, humbled mor and fools away my obstinady,
