IMPROVEMENT OF SOILS.

The present extensive use of guana as a ma nure, is apt to make us overlook a very important item in successful cultivation : namely, the mechanical condition of the sod. -- I-have been led to a consideration of this subject, by: the remarks of a correspondent in a late newspaper, where he seems to consider the mole useful by "feeding on worms." It must not be forgotten that plants do not feed on soil, as we generally understand it. Properly speaking, soil is the medium through which the plant oliains its food. It is, then, quite as necessary to inquire whether our soil is in a fit condi tion to receive nutriment for the plant, as what nutriment is best fitted for it.

The various gases of the atmosphere, heat, moisture, and the elementary substances tha compass organic matter, enter largely into the food of plants. If the mechanical condition of the soil is bad, that is if it be too loose or too hard, too wet or too dry, these principles cannot be made available to the plant. If the soil is too loose, all the invaluable particles are carried away by every shower, and little is left but silicious matter for the support of the plant. A wet soil, on the other hand, soon dries in hot weather, and becomes, in familian language, "as hard as brick,' and plants in such, soon die for want of moisture, in a dry spell. If a soil then be too light, a dressing of clay, mud, or any thing binding, will be of more lasting service than the most powerful application of guano, or any chemical manure; while if it be too heavy, it will be essentially benefitted by an application of coarse material, or, what is far better, draining. In the absence of these improvements, farm-yard manure will be of far more service than guano, as it has a tendency to keep the soil open, and less liable to "bind." Many farmers must have noted how various are the results of the experiments with guano; some finding great benefit from its use, others failing to perceive any; while, in the latter instance, barnyard manure has yielded a fair return. This arises from the latter acting mechanically as well as chemically, and not from any weakness in the quality of guano as manure. A further hint can be taken from this; it shows the advantage that the farmer has whose soil is in a fine mechani. cal condition ; he can apply any kind of manur

to his soil with the effect he desires. The poor, "insensible" worm, whose destruc tion by the mole, our friend above alluded to so rejoices over, is a very important agent in the mechanical improvement of soils. Feeding on the debris of vegetable matter, his excrements tend to give light soils a firmer basis but it is in stiff soils that his services are more important. Here his meandering courses thro the silent clay, form the channels thro' which water is conveyed through such soils, and with it, its attendant followers, heat, air, and the gases from the surface. Stiff soils in which worms abound, not only are enriched by these means, but the mechanical condition is so much improved that they do not suffer so much from drought as those do in which worms are scarce, because the air with which these holes became filled, being a conconductor, does not encourage or aid the rapid evaporation of the moisture.

Draining acts on a large and magnificent scale, in the same way that the earth-worm does on a small one. By opening a passage beneath the surface of the soil, to which the rain can penetrate, we are enabled to carry moisture down to where it never else would be, and thus lay in a store of moisture that serves us in many a dry spell. Those who are opposed to draining, often argue that this is carrying the water away ; but we in reality lead that water through the ground first; which would otherwise pass immediately over the surface. But it is not merely in the greater amount of moisture let into the soil, by under draining that we rest our case. As I said.

when speaking of the earth-worm, the gases,

THIS valuable preparation has long been used in New York and Philadelphia, where it has attained an immense popularity, for cleansing, preserving and beautifying the teeth. It is an excellent remedy for sore, soft or bleeding gums. It also imparts a delightful freshuess to the mouth and agreenble odor to the breath.

Read the following from Dr. Murray. "I can, with the utmost confidence, recom-mend to the public, Zerman's Anti-Scorbuic Tooth Wash as the best in use. In my practice as a Deulist, I have used and recommended it for Tooth Wash as the best in use. In my practice as a Dentist, I have used and recommended it for me hast five years, and have found it to give sat-isfaction in every instance; as the Wash does not contain acid, or anything injurious to the teeth or gums; but, on the contrary, is the best antiscptie in the practice, and therefore, would recommend he use of it, nof only to those who wish to pre-serve their teeth and gums, and have a wholesome ibreath, but also to those who have discassed gums tor teeth. The use of the Wash, for a short time, will insure a return to their healthy state. "GEORGE E MURRAY, Dentist, No. 61, S. Eloventh st., below Chestnut Phil'a. 'Ibr. Hendel, of Carlisle, anys :-- Mr. Zer-man, I am well pleased with your Tooth Wash it not only cleanase and whitens the teeth without injuring them, but it enressore or bleeding gums. I cheerfully recommend it to the profession and public, as the very best preparation that can be used for cleanasing and preserving the teeth, healing the gums, and giving sweetness to the breath.
