Mulching Trees.

We cannot too, carnestly or too often call at tention to the necessity of mulching all newly planted trees, vines, roses, &c. Care in this particular is becoming almost as indispensable as skillful planting. It is the only safeguard against our increasing variable climate, the frequent extremes of which from warm to cold and from wet to dry, and vice versa, induces a diseased condition of the sap vessels, gives a sudden check to its circulation, and we believe is very often the cause of bleght in the peak and diseases in other trees. The instinct which brompts to prey upon all forms of diseased or decaying vegetable life is often shown in this way, and is considered the source of injuy to the tree, while it is realy sometimes mere effact from the other cause.

Mulching is mearly covering the ground t der the tree or plant, according to its size, from a circle of one foot to three or four feet, with half decayed manure, partly decomposed chip dirt from the woodshed, leaf mould, hay or straw, to shade the soil and preserve an even teuperdture about the roots. The soil unde this covering will be observed to be always damp by the prevention of evaporation. If manure is used it will always be carried down rapidly by rains, thus keeping the tree in a vigorous growing state. Mulching does away with the necessity of frequent watering. In a dry spell of weather we have known newly planted trees and shrubs kept literally drenched daily with buckets of water. If the poor subject shows yellow leaves and other symp_ toms of disease, it is thought an indication of requiring more drenching. Hydopathy in again administered in increased quantities, till life is at last actually drowned out, The nurse ryman then comes in frequently for the whole responsibility of having sold an unbealthy tree And few there are having planting to do, who understand its true philosophy and modus op orandi : how few reflect, when disappointed in not having fruit or shade as soon as they expected, that the skilful propagation, planting and management of a tree requires the nicest and most dexterous appliances of both scientific and practical study, that its growth from a small seed to its full size for removal, and afterwards requires care, anxiety and close at. tention for years, and that while its progress is more interesting and beautiful that any han. diwork of the manifacturer or machine, it requires af least no less pacient industry and skilful treatment to bring about the desired re-Bult. We recomend every one having an acre ground in adition to regular periodicles like the Farm Journal to possess one or more of the many, works on the management of fruit, and other trees, ornamental grounds and shrubbery.
