

Agricultural.

How to Make one Farm equal to Three.

G. T. Stewart, Esq., in a recent address before the Ohio agricultural society, thus speaks of the subject:

Many farmers who are destroying the productiveness of their farms by shallow-work, as they find that their crops are diminishing, think only of extending their area by adding acres of surface, as if they supposed that their title deeds only gave them a right to six inches deep of their earth. If they will take those deeds, study their meaning, and apply the lesson to their fields, they will soon realize in three-fold crops the fact that the law has given them three farms where they supposed they had but one—in other words, that the sub-soil brought up and combined with the top-soil and enriched with the atmospheric influences, and those other elements which agricultural science will teach them to apply to their ground, will increase three fold the measure of its productiveness. To show to what extent the fertility of the soil can be increased, I refer to a statement in the last patent office report. In the year 1850, there was nine competitors for the premium corn crop of Kentucky, each of whom cultivated ten acres. Their average crop was about 122 bushels per acre. At this time the average crop of wheat per acre in the harvest of Great Britain, on the soil cultivated for centuries, is about double that produced on the virgin soil of Ohio.—Why is this? Simply because British farmers are educated men, and apply work wisely. They pay back to the earth what they borrow. They endeavor by every means in their power to enrich their ground, and in return it enriches them. If our farmers, instead of laboring to double their acres, would endeavor to double their crops, they would find it a vast saving of time and toil, and an increase of profits.

Many of them never think of digging ten inches into the soil, unless they have dreamed about a crock of gold hid in the earth. But if they would set about the work of digging in earnest, every man would find his crock of gold, without the aid of dreams or divination.

We have a great advantage over our British farmers in the fact that our farmers nearly all hold the lands which they cultivate, in fee simple, while in England they are chiefly tenants, hiring the land of the nobility, paying enormous rents to proprietors, besides heavy taxes to government. Taxes here are comparatively light, and our farmers are their own landlords. Hence they have been able to pay three-fold wages for labor to those paid in Europe, yet undersell the British farmers in their own market.—Ohio Farmer.

Spaying Milch Cows.

Spaying of cows, at a certain period of their lives, offers immense advantages to the agriculturist and consumer, in producing much augmentation of milk and meat. In this way the animal escapes a host of ailments, and spares a host of losses, sustained in consequence of her bulling at times when it is impossible to gratify her desires. Spaying of cows, Prof. Bouley says, creates a new race, sterile for breeding, but productive and valuable for the purpose of yielding milk for the dairy and meat for the butchers. Spayed cows yield annually, for the first two or three years at least, a third more milk than they were in the habit of giving before the performance of the operation.—A cow spayed thirty or forty days after calving, or at the time she is giving the most milk, continues to yield, if not for the remainder of life, at least for many years, the same large quantity of milk, and sometimes more than she gave at the time of performing the operation.

French veterinarians have, for many years, had their attention directed to this subject; and each year their experience, as well as that of agriculturists, leads them to speak more and more favorably of the practice.—French work.

Mummy Wheat.

While time has swept away all the secret memories of the friends of the ancient dead, and left only what appears to this generation a useless collection of dust, in form of a mummy, we again, however, have occasion to rejoice in that ancient art in another instance, where embalming has, after the lapse of more than three thousand years, given to this generation a specimen of wheat superior to any heretofore discovered, and will, doubtless, prove a great blessing to humanity.

A professor of agriculture at Compiegne in France, exhibits to those who desire to see them, stalks of wheat grown from seed thirty centuries old. Nine grains of Egyptian wheat were found, some months ago, in a sarcophagus opened at Cairo, by the side of the mummy. They were sown, and, strange to say, germinated, and that, too, with a tropical vigor and luxuriance of vegetation. The stalks were as solid and as straight as those of a rose bush; one root produced twenty ears of wheat, each ear containing 100 grains—so that one seed produced 2,000 seeds. The size of these was enormous, and its yield of farinaeons matter proportionately large. The agriculture of Sesostri's time must have been singularly precocious, to yield such Brobdignian wheat at that age of the world.

VALUABLE RECIPES.

PICKLING TOMATOES.

Take tomatoes two-thirds ripe, (when they begin to turn a little red), pick them with a fork, put them in a strong brine, and let them remain eight days; then put them in weak vinegar to remain twenty-four hours; remove them from this, put them in stone jars; and to a peck of tomatoes add a bottle of mustard, an ounce of cloves, and an ounce of ground, black pepper laying alternately a layer of tomatoes and spices. Then pour on strong vinegar cold, and they will be found to be delicious. The brine should be prepared by boiling and putting in as much salt as will dissolve, then suffered to cool. For any kind of pickles it is best when prepared in this way.

ANOTHER.

Take the small round tomatoes, let them lay in weak vinegar two or three days; then prepare the best of vinegar by putting in cloves, allspice, pepper, cinnamon and such spices as one may fancy, and then seal it well. When entirely cold, put in the tomatoes, and if there is sufficient body to the vinegar, your pickles will never require any further trouble, provided they are kept from the air. An ounce of alum to a gallon of vinegar is a great improvement to cucumber pickles, but the writer has never tried it for tomatoes.

TO PICKLE ONIONS.

When gathering your onions in the fall save all the small ones for pickling. Peel them carefully, and soak them in strong brine two or three weeks. This takes out the strong taste and smell. Then take them out of the brine and soak them 24 hours in weak vinegar. When taken out from this, insert a clove in the top of each onion, and lay them carefully in a stone jar and cover with cold vinegar. They will be fit for use in a few days.

PICKLED PEACHES.

Take a gallon of good vinegar, add a few pounds of sugar, boil it for a few moments, and remove any scum that may rise; then take clingstone peaches that are fully ripe; rub them with a flannel cloth to get the down off them, and stick three or four cloves in each; put them in a glass or earthen vessel, and pour the liquor upon them boiling hot; cover them up, and let them stand in a cool place for a week or ten days, then pour off the liquor, and boil it as before, after which return it boiling to the peaches, which should be carefully covered up and stored away for future use.

ANOTHER.

Select the largest and finest fruit, and cleanse them of the fuzz by carefully wiping them with a moist cloth. Place them in a jar and cover them with strong salt water, and allow them to remain for eight or ten days, then remove them to a vessel containing fresh water, in which allow them to remain sufficiently long to draw out all the salt. About three days will be long enough to effect this. They may then be removed to the pickling jar, in which they should be packed in layers, and between each layer there should be placed a handful of sugar, a few cloves and a small quantity of cinnamon, the whole should then be covered with the best vinegar. The fruit should be perfectly ripe, but not the least soft. Good peaches may be preserved for two or three years in strong brine, the same as cucumbers and artichokes.

PRESERVING PEACHES.

We are confident of the thanks of every notable house-wife for the following receipt for preserving peaches which we obtained from the wife of an experienced fruit grower:

To twelve pounds of peaches, take six pounds of clean brown sugar and one pint best cider vinegar. Simmer the vinegar and sugar together, which will make a clear syrup. Pour boiling water upon the peaches, and remove them in two minutes from the water, and wipe them dry without breaking the skin. Put them into the syrup and boil gently until the fruit is cooked to the stone. Keep the preserves in jars, which must be kept closely covered and in a cool place. They should be inspected occasionally, and if a white mould appear upon the surface of the syrup, it must be carefully skimmed off, and the syrup scalded and returned to the peaches. The peaches tried last fall were a seedling variety ripened the last of October. They were acid but preserved the peach flavor in a high degree which was retained by this method in a perfect manner. This is the most economical, and, to our taste, the very best preserve we know.
