German who had turned Turk, thus made his destiny turn upon a pair of gloves? The answer is no less curious than what has al ready been stated.

Michael, the fourth son of Peter Hattis, a poor Austrian noble, was so weakly in his infancy that, but for the greatest efforts of maternal affection, he must have died long before reaching the age of manhood. At eighteen he was entrusted with the superintendence of bridges and roads at Carlstadt, and at twenty was appointed sub-inspector at Zara, in Delmatia. Having been compromised in a political affair, he fled from his country to the Turkish frontier, with only a small sum in his pocket. The first village he came to after crossing the frontier, was called Omer Unis, so he assumed the name of Omer with the turban, and proceeded st random through the province of Bosnia. Here he was waylaid by robbers, who stripped him of everything, not even excepting his clothes, and left him naked on the road. A peasant happening to pass by soon afterwards, and over the affair; and next morning he went pitying his destitute condition, received him pleted. into his house, and gave him some money.

He was thus enabled to reach Banjalouka, where he obtained a situation in a shop.-Here it was his good fortune to meet with a favorable turn in the current of his history.

His employer had a charming daughter .-Omer was not insensible to her attractions. The young girl could not without emotion see the exile pursued by misfortune-this brave
